keting Suggestions

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE
WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Liberal and long-term government credits to the cattlemen of the west and southwest will be recommended by President Coolidge's Agricultural Commission, when it assembles in Washington on Jan. 5. The plight of the cattle breeders on the ranges is regarded by the commission as the outstanding emergency in the American agricultural situation.

Under the auspices of the federal Farm Loan Bureau, the commission will recommend that relief advances at low rates, and repayable on easy conditions, be forthwith placed at the disposal of the cattle industry. A few days ago President Coolidge expressed his interest in that particular branch of agriculture by appointing Albert Calvin Williams of Texas to the Farm Loan Bureau. Mr. Williams formerly was president of a live-stock loan company at Fort Worth, and is especially experienced in making loans on cattle.

Twelve Banks Involved
It is probable that relief measures to be urged by the agricultural commission next month will be largely directed by Mr. Williams. They will be worked out beforehand in consultation with the twelve regional federal land and intermediate credit banks at Springfield, Mass., Baltimore, Columbia, S. C., Louisville, New Orleans, St. Louis, St. Paul, Omaha, Wichita, Houston, Berkeley and Spokane. Incidentally, all matters of finance affecting agriculture will be considered.

Help for the cattlemen, who are scattered throughout the rural west with the exception of the wheat and corn belts, will be the only emergency measure declared by the president's commission to be of vital and immediate importance. All other branches of agriculture have been found to be taking care of themselves. Where not already back on a normal or semi-normal basis, they are working steadily and satisfactorily toward that end. The live-stock industry as a whole is today on a sounder footing than at any time since the price collapse of 1919 and 1920.

The President's Viewpoint
But the cattle breeders—the raisers of the animals which are the raw material of the American meat industry—have had more setbacks than breeders of sheep or pigs. For the last three years the cattlemen have been systematically liquidating. War-time loans contracted at high interest are largely paid off, but conditions are still far from satisfactory. A prominent representative of agriculture in the Senate says that "three-quarters of the western cattlemen are broke. It is to meet that emergency that the government measures are contemplated by the agricultural commission."

Treasury authorities consulted by this writer assert that no new legislation should be necessary to effect the proposed relief program for the cattlemen. There is said to be ample credit and machinery available for all purposes, although it is admitted that the treasury has not been operated as helpfully or effectively as it might have been.

President Coolidge more than a year ago expressed the view that better financial management in the farming regions was as vital to agricultural recovery as better agricultural methods. He said, bluntly, that in his opinion "bad banking" was about as much to blame for conditions as "bad farming."

Co-operative Marketing
After tackling relief for the cattlemen, the agricultural commission will make important recommendations regarding co-operative marketing. The attention of Congress was drawn to this branch of agriculture by the Federal Trade Commission at the beginning of the present session. Huston Thompson, former chairman of the commission, submitted a report on co-operation in foreign countries, based on Mr. Thompson's studies of it in the summer of 1923.

George W. Norris (R) Senator from Nebraska, urged the Senate to arrange at once for widespread distribution of the report throughout the farming sections. The Thompson report, which dealt with 15 European countries, recommended consideration of the following projects for the further development of co-operation in the United States:

1. Farmers' co-operative sales societies for marketing produce as directly as possible from the farm to the urban household.
2. A simple, practical and inexpensive system of rural credit societies of the deposit and loan type, managed by the farmers themselves.
3. Distribution of electric power in rural communities through farmers' co-operative societies for the furnishing of light, heat and power.
4. Retail consumers' co-operative societies in thickly populated rural districts.
5. Co-operative distribution of household coal.
6. Distribution of milk by consumers' co-operative societies in large cities.
7. Co-operative export associations for marketing American farm products abroad.

Peace School Sought
as Check on War Idea

Philadelphia, Dec. 18.—PLEA for a "college for peace to rival the war colleges," was made here by Philip Gunion, retiring president of the National Industrial Advertising Association, in an address at a dinner at which a unit of that organization was formed.

"Too much attention is being given to preparing the youth of this country for war," said Mr. Gunion. "It is time that business men realized the danger of such a mental attitude. War is its inevitable result. Peace will endure if that attitude is reversed."

BRITISH TO STAY
IN COLOGNE AREAGermany Must Satisfy Allies
It Is Faithfully Fulfilling Treaty

By Cable from Monitor Bureau
LONDON, Dec. 19.—The British occupation of the Cologne area is to continue for the present, Marquess Curzon announced this on behalf of the British Government in the House of Lords last night. January 10, he recalled, was the earliest date on which, under the Versailles Treaty, Germany had fulfilled its obligation. The British Government "had not the slightest desire to continue the occupation. The sooner it was ended, the better from the British viewpoint and the better from the viewpoint of the world. They wanted to get back to settled conditions," said Lord Curzon. He gave reasons, however, why this action could not be taken at the present moment.

The Cologne bridgehead was not entirely occupied by British troops. There were besides some Belgian and French troops and Great Britain could not act alone, but only after consultation with its allies.

Question of Default
Further, they had to be satisfied, he said, of Germany's faithful fulfillment of the treaty. He put the reparations question aside, since provided Germany had loyally carried out the Dawes agreement, the British Government hoped the question of default there would not arise.

The question was different as regards military conditions, regarding which the Allied Military Control Commission's report was awaited. This report could not be received by Jan. 10, and he attributed this delay specifically to "constant, persistent obstruction" during the past two years "at the hands of Germany."

The commission, The Christian Science Monitor representative understands, while finding the German Government willing to help, has encountered obstacles from military subordinates and is not satisfied that Germany has yet fully carried out its obligations as defined in the Ambassadors' Conference note last March.

Misunderstandings Disposed Of
Lord Curzon's statement, it is observed in informed quarters, disposes of several misunderstandings. Firstly, it brushes away Raymond Poincaré's assumption that the period from which the term of the allied occupation of Cologne should run should run has not yet begun.

Secondly, it does not lend countenance to the German contention that the question of the continuation of the British occupation of Cologne should be regarded merely as one of practical expediency, so long as the French remain in the Rhine region.

Thirdly, it rejects the argument heard in Paris that the reparations question justifies the prolongation of the occupation.

Instead of any of these it dwells on the fulfillment of the terms of the disarmament clauses, and thus indicates to the German Government the way by which evacuation may be secured.

PRESS OPPOSES
BRITISH ACTIONQuestion of Irish Treaty
Registration With League
Arouses Opposition

By Special Cable
CAPE TOWN, Dec. 19.—England's objections to the registration of the Irish treaty with the League of Nations is the subject of keen criticism by the Dutch press here. It is regarded as an attempt to tamper with the dominion status because the empire is founded on membership in the League. The Government newspaper Burger is particularly frank. "England's attitude is an attack not merely on the position of Ireland, but on that of every Dominion that appreciates the new status, and wishes it to be increasingly put into practice."

"The objections raised by the Foreign Secretary apply equally to the other dominions. Our membership in the League is not subject to limitations, neither does it depend in any way on the caprice of imperialists in London. Yet when it is a question of voting power, the members of the empire are supposed to signify as much as Holland or Chili, because such position suits England. We expect our government," the paper concludes, "will strenuously resist any attempt to reduce the constitutional powers we obtained."

The English press contains lengthy explanations of the position. The Cape Argus says that it is, of course, quite open for any of the Dominions to challenge the validity of the position taken by the British Government, in which case the whole matter of inter-imperial relations will have to be debated at the Imperial Conference.

Free State Envoy
Foresees Ireland
Leaving the League

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—A special dispatch from Geneva to the New York World today says: "Ireland will withdraw from the League of Nations at once if the British protest against its registration by the League of Nations of the Anglo-Irish treaty is accepted by the League." Michael MacWhite, Free State envoy here, told the World correspondent today. "He declared that Ireland will not turn back. Britain is playing a losing game. She would declare there are different grades of membership for the League. If the League admits Great Britain's contention, then Ireland would cease membership within 24 hours. The League must face the issue squarely."

"The question is as grave for the League as for the Dominions. Great Britain's communication declares that His Majesty's Government have consistently taken the view that neither the League covenant nor any conventions concluded under the auspices of the League are intended to govern relations inter se of the various parts of the British Commonwealth, and that the terms of Article Eighteen of the covenant are not applicable to the Anglo-Irish treaty."

Registration Necessary
"The record of the third League Council, meeting on May 19, 1920, says 'Article 18 refers to treaties, and Ireland is not a treaty.' It is thereby understood registration is necessary for all treaties, etc., which become or have become finally binding after the date of the coming into force of the covenant."

"We hold any dispute arising over any international compact registered before the League is competent for the League's intervention. Great Britain approved Ireland's entrance into the League, and in doing so she accepted the League's jurisdiction."

It is not denied that the major industries, like steel, iron, and cotton, are not absolutely excluded under the scheme, as hitherto adumbrated, but it is explained that they are quite unlikely to be able to fulfill the conditions laid down, especially as regards proving that they are suffering from unprecedented foreign competition in the home market.

This follows up on the Liberals' much placarded assertions, which have been supported by such high economic authorities as Walter Runciman, director of the Westminister Bank, and William L. Hitchens, chairman of the Cammell, Laird Company, to the effect that Great Britain is threatened with a general protective tariff.

The Conservatives' comment in this connection is that the bill bringing the scheme into effect is not yet settled and the alarm in industrial circles regarding it is, therefore, quite premature.

"IMPROVIDENT" RAIL REPAIRS
WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Expenditures made by the Erie Railroad during 1922 for the repair of locomotives by private contractors, instead of in its own shop, have been declared by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be "improvident."

The railroad contended that the shopmen's strike forced it to adopt the policy. The commission said private contractors in some cases had been paid more for repairing a locomotive than the locomotive would be worth new.

One wing of the new library building has just been completed. ## New Labor Chief

WILLIAM GREEN

American Labor Federation
Elects William Green, OhioNew President of A. F. of L. Says He Will Follow Along the Lines of Gompers

NEW YORK, Dec. 19 (AP)—William Green today was elected president of the American Federation of Labor in a formal session following which he was sworn in as the eighth president of the organization.

Mr. Green is a native Ohioan, a product of the Ohio coal fields, and is a former president of the Ohio State Senate. His home is in Coshocton, O. He is a Mason, Elk and Odd Fellow, a member of the American Academy of Political Science and of the Baptist church.

He has been a vice-president of the A. F. of L. since 1913, and has a strong personal following which is believed to assure his re-election by the federation as a whole when it meets in annual convention next October.

The new president has been secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America since 1912. James P. Noonan, president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, was elected eighth vice-president, to fill the vacancy of the executive council caused by Green's promotion.

The election of Mr. Green was unanimous. The keynote of his administration, he said, would be "constructive progressivism."

"I believe in always driving ahead and in building permanently as we go," he said.

In a formal statement issued soon after his election Mr. Green said that he would carry out the policies which Mr. Gompers followed as leader of organized labor in America.

"It shall ever be my steadfast purpose to adhere to the fundamental principles of trade-unionism so ably championed by Mr. Gompers, and upon which the superstructure of organized labor rests," said Mr. Green.

"In co-operation with my colleagues on the executive council of the American Federation of Labor and the chosen officers of all affiliated organizations, we will carry forward the work of organization and education among the workers of our land."

"We will endeavor to promote collective bargaining, the observance of wage agreements and the acceptance of the Organized Labor movement by all classes of people as a logical, necessary, normal force in the economic, industrial and social life of our Nation."

"While striving for the attainment of the praiseworthy purposes, we shall ever be mindful of our duties and obligations as American citizens. Our devotion to America and American institutions must never be successfully challenged. Our demand upon society for a higher standard of life, better wages, independent and humane conditions of employment, must ever be based upon our inalienable rights to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Our problems must ever be met and solved upon the basis of American fair play and in accordance with American traditions and American ideals."

Albania has an area of only 10,000 square miles of rough, mountainous country, with about 750,000 people. There is a national prejudice against taxpaying and, although the people are hardy mountaineers, their history is a long record of bloodshed and turbulence. Albania emerged from the World War an independent state.

The Balkan War of 1913 had left Bulgaria embittered against Greece and Serbia—the latter now Yugoslavia. Captain Smith continued. Irreconcilable groups formed "Macedonian revolutionary committees" or combatant bands, which had no political aims with brigandage.

WARSHIPS MOVEItaly Sends Naval Units
to Durazzo and to San
Giovanni di Medua

ROME, Dec. 19.—The situation in Albania, although getting worse, at the moment has not yet reached such gravity as to provoke complications of an international character.

Two Italian warships have been sent to Albanian waters.

The object of sending the two warships to Durazzo and San Giovanni di Medua is twofold: first, to insure direct communication between Italy and Albania in the event of extension of the civil war now raging in Albania; and, second, to be on the spot in the event of the territorial integrity of Albania being violated.

The Albanian Legation in Rome announced that the Albanian Government has ordered a general mobilization.

Among the articles in Italian papers on the situation in Albania there is a notable one written by General Benicenza, an Italian deputy, who expresses great apprehension for the future of Albania.

"If the news coming from Tirana," he writes, "is correct, we are not witnessing an episode in the internal life of the Albanian State, but a real attempt on the part of Yugoslavia to get a foothold in Albania. Should this happen the Italian position in the Adriatic would be seriously threatened and Italy would be compelled to take steps necessary in its own defense."

It is officially denied that the Italian and Yugoslav governments have concluded an agreement about Albania impeding its independence and integrity.

Capt. G. G. Smith Explains
Chaotic Situation in Albania

Special from Monitor Bureau

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 19.—Chaotic conditions in Albania are blamed for present Balkan disorders by Capt. G. Gordon Smith, attached to the Yugoslav Legation here. Religious, racial and political differences within the mountainous Albanian territory where the men are "walking arsenals," where feuds abound and where the illiteracy rate is 90 per cent, Captain Smith told a representative of The Christian Science Monitor.

Of trouble inside and start disturbances which extend beyond the boundaries.

Ahmed Bey Zoghri, former Albanian Prime Minister was deposed by Fan Noli, a bishop of the Greek Orthodox Church, and formerly a Harvard student. He is now seeking a return to power, and appears to be on the way to success. That is the immediate cause of the disturbance, said Captain Smith. The fundamental cause of trouble goes deep into the past history of the Balkan peninsula.

Albania has an area of only 10,000 square miles of rough, mountainous country, with about 750,000 people. There is a national prejudice against taxpaying and, although the people are hardy mountaineers, their history is a long record of bloodshed and turbulence. Bombay Picks Up
American Concert

By Special Cable
Calcutta, Dec. 19.—An Indian radio-casting records in India were beaten when, two occasions during the last few days, America was picked up by Bombay. On the first occasion two Marconi Company engineers intercepted one of the new beam system short-wave Morse transmissions from England to South Africa, subsequently hearing a concert broadcast on a short wavelength from KDKA wireless station at Pittsburgh.

Later a local amateur, by name Helberd, listened to an American radio-casting on a normal wavelength. Among the items heard were a lady's song, a chorus entitled "By-By" by a party of Princess Minstrels, a fox-trot, and a pianoforte solo.

$11,000,000 URGED
FOR PROHIBITIONHouse Appropriations Committee Raises Budget

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—In the largest peace-time supply bill ever presented to Congress, the House Appropriations Committee includes an item of $11,000,000 for prohibition enforcement. This figure is $783,120 more than was recommended by the budget.

The measure carrying more than $750,000,000 for Treasury and Post Office Department activities during the coming fiscal year, also provides $29,597,835 for the Coast Guard, which is now being used to prevent liquor smuggling.

"From the evidence obtained by the committee," said the report, "there is no decrease in work to be performed by the enforcement of the Prohibition and Narcotic Act as to justify at the present time a decrease in the organization."

The committee recommended that not to exceed $50,000 be expended for the dissemination of information and appeal for law observance and law enforcement through the use of posters and other modes of public appeal.

The total is $763,180,522 or $11,890,614 more than the current year, but approximately $12,000,000 less than budget estimates.

Of the combined total $126,911,167 would go to the Treasury and $636,269,415 to the Post Office Department. Among the Post Office Department items is $2,600,000 for the transportation of mail service—$10,000 less than the amount granted for this year. The appropriation for air mail service is $150,000 less than the amount available this year but does not contemplate reduction of service.

The bill carries $326,373 for mail transmission by pneumatic tubes—the amount available this year, $382,500 for rural delivery service, the latter a decrease of $60,000.

GREKS' STATUS TO COME UP AT HAGUE

GENEVA, Dec. 19 (AP)—The Permanent Court of International Justice will meet at The Hague on Jan. 12 to take up Greco-Turkish questions, it was announced by the secretary of the League of Nations today. The court will consider the status of the Greek residents of Constantinople and the interpretation of the Greco-Turkish convention.

Turkey claims the right to expel thousands of Greeks from Constantinople on the ground that they had not been permanently established there for the length of time specified in the convention with Greece to permit them to continue their residence.

Reorganization Is Forecast
In Three Government Agencies

Special from Monitor Bureau
WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Reorganization of three of the most important independent agencies of the Government soon after March 4, is forecast. President Coolidge has in contemplation changes in the United States Shipping Board, the Tariff Commission and Federal Trade Commission, which are calculated to bring about more harmony in these important bureaus.

Conditions in these bureaus during both the Harding and Coolidge Administrations have been embarrassing a number of times. Definite designation of the respective functions of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation should be made through legislation, the President declared in his recent message to Congress. To this end, a bill has been introduced by Wesley L. Jones (R), Senator from Washington, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, with a view to carrying out the President's wishes.

While it is the desire of the Administration that the legislation be enacted into law this session of Congress, doubt as to the possibility of this being done is expressed by Republican leaders.

Differences of views on the part of the members of the Tariff Commission, notably with reference to the question of lowering the duty on sugar, which is now before the President for his decision, are understood to have induced him to make the changes which would bring the commission more nearly into conformity with Republican tariff fundamentals.

Likewise, the Administration feels that some changes should be made in the personnel of the Federal Trade Commission, it is stated. Mention in this connection is made of Huston Thompson, ranking Democrat on the commission, who has never hesitated to bring his views on publicly no matter how divergent they might be to those of the Administration.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—An oil conservation board, consisting of the secretaries of War, Navy, Interior and Commerce has been established by President Coolidge.

The new board was study the Government's responsibilities in oil conservation, and will seek the full cooperation of the oil industry to that end.

The commission appointed by Mr. Coolidge last March to study the future supply of fuel oil for the Navy will work in co-operation with the new board.

Letters to Secretaries

The President announced the establishment of the new board in letters addressed to the secretaries of War, Navy, Interior, and Commerce, in which he said:

"It is evident that the present methods of capturing our oil deposits is wasteful to an alarming degree, in that it becomes impossible to conserve oil in the ground under our present leasing and royalty practices if a neighboring owner or lessee desires to gain possession of his deposits."

"Developing aircraft indicate that our national defense must be supplemented, if not dominated, by aviation. It is even probable that the supremacy may be determined by the possession of available petroleum and its products."

Warns Against Shortage
"I am advised that our current oil supply is kept up only by drilling many thousands of new wells each year, and that the failure to bring in producing wells for a two-year period would slow down the wheels of industry and bring about serious industrial depression."

"The problem of a future shortage in fuel and lubricating oil, not to mention gasoline, must be avoided, or our manufacturing productivity will be curtailed to an extent not easily calculated."

"We are not today, however, facing an undersupply of oil. The production of our resources is limited, but our immediate requirements are met. That overproduction in itself encourages cheapness which in turn leads to wastefulness and disregard of essential values. Oil, of which our resources are limited, is largely taking the place of coal, the supply of which seems to be unlimited, but coal cannot take the place of oil in most of its higher uses, on land or sea, or in the air."

responsibility in all of its aspects the consideration it demands, I have constituted a federal oil conservation board, consisting of the secretaries of War, Navy, Interior, and Commerce, to study the Government's responsibilities and to enlist the full cooperation of representatives of the oil industry in the investigation.

The Government itself is at present one of the largest consumers of oil lands, and in the domestic still includes large undeveloped reserves of oil, so that the administration of oil resources is a practical question with the Department of the Interior."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Government has submitted its answer to the plea in abatement in the cases started by E. L. Doherty, E. L. Doherty, Jr., Albert B. Ford and Harry F. Sinclair, growing out of naval oil leases. Argument was set in Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for Jan. 9.

The defense contention that the members of the grand jury which returned the indictments might have been influenced by listening to a radio talk by Thomas J. Walsh (D.), Senator from Montana, the Senate's oil prosecutor, held by the Government not sufficient to cause the court to grant the plea. Other arguments set forth by the defense also met disapproval from the Government counsel.

ALBANIA CALLS MEN TO COLORS; WARSHIPS MOVE

These Bulgarian bands are accused of having used Albanian territory as a retreat and now cause constant trouble for Yugoslavia, according to Captain Smith. There are also groups of Albanians, called "Katzaks," who operate against Yugoslavia on their own account. The result has been that each new outbreak in Albanian local politics has started further attacks along the border against Yugoslavia.

Tendency Toward Bolshevism

To further complicate the situation, hands of one-time Wrangel "White" Russian troops are alleged to be in Ahmed Zoghu's command, while Bolshevist leaders have entered the troubled scene.

According to Captain Smith, a cause for further dissensions in Albanian politics has been over the tendency to take a Bolshevist line, party wishing to accept the Soviet's proffered assistance, while another group would repel it.

Up to six months ago the Muhammadans were in power, but Fan Noli overthrew Ahmed Zoghu and seized control for himself. Zoghu found shelter in Belgrade and is now trying to return, and it is his attack which has precipitated the present trouble.

Fan Noli Reported Fled

BELGRADE, Dec. 19 (AP)—Late news dispatches received from Albania by way of Prizren report that the Albanian Premier, Bishop Fan Noli, has fled. It is confirmed, this would indicate that the insurgents had succeeded in their object, which was the overthrow of the Noli government.

BRITAIN RESTORES STATE TO DYNASTY

Sardesai of Savantwadi Served With Honor in Great War

BOMBAY, Nov. 19 (Special Correspondence)—A memorial service to the annals of the Savantwadi State occurred recently, when Bapusaheb Bhosle was invested with the ruling powers, with the title of "Sardesai of Savantwadi" by Mr. Mackie, political agent to the Government of Bombay. The administration of this State was taken over by the British Government from the hands of the great-grandfather of the new ruler about a century ago on account of his misrule.

This Prince received his education in a public school in England and rendered great services during the war. After a lapse of nearly 100 years, therefore, Savantwadi is again having its own ruler to administer its affairs. A kharita (treaty document) was presented to the Prince by the political agent on behalf of the Bombay Governor stating:

For nearly a century your State has been under our administration. Today it is handed over to you well organized and prosperous. Your education, your character as a ruler, and the diligence with which you have studied to prepare yourself for the work of governing your State fill me with confidence that you will think more of the duties and responsibilities of your office than of its privileges.

The noble response of the people of your State to the call of arms during the war constitutes a claim to the best effort that you can put forward for the amelioration of their condition.

REMOVAL OF 'EL' TRAIN FROM BROOKLYN BRIDGE ADVOCATED

Harkness Would Dig New Tunnel, Put Surface Cars on Elevated Tracks and Use Lower Grades for Vehicular Traffic

Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The proposed rebuilding of the Brooklyn Bridge could be averted by the removal of trains from this structure and the digging of a new tunnel between Brooklyn and New York City for the use of these trains, Leroy T. Harkness, member of the Transit Commission, testified today in the hearing being conducted before Justice John V. McAvoy into the city's transit situation.

The commissioner said that by taking the trains from the bridge, the surface cars could be moved over the elevated tracks, and the trolley tracks converted into vehicular highways for two lanes of cars, thereby relieving the expense of strengthening the bridge.

Manhattan Bridge Situation

Attention also was called to the two unused tracks on the Manhattan Bridge, which are planned eventually to tie up with the projected Nassau Street loop, and which will relieve to a marked extent the present congested situation, both at Canal Street, Manhattan and DeKalb Avenue Station, Brooklyn.

The two unused tracks would, if utilized, handle the capacity of the DeKalb Station 50 per cent., Mr. Harkness stated.

The Brooklyn Bridge originally had only two tracks, over which all the traffic between the two boroughs was handled, to the old Park Row terminal, but the building of tunnels has relieved this situation. A physical connection with this line and the subway in Brooklyn, he averred, was important, but the elevated rolling stock could not be used in the subway.

To remedy this, the Fulton Street Elevated was remodeled in 1914 to carry the heaviest steel cars. Mr. Harkness agreed that this involved a useless expenditure, unless and until heavy cars are run over the line.

The connection between subway and elevated at Ashland Place, Brooklyn, was held to be a matter of prime importance, but delays have been encountered here, as elsewhere, in obtaining action, it was stated.

Canal Street Conditions

The Nassau Street loop of the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Company, which the city contracted to build in 1912, and the delay in fulfilling its alleged contractual obligations has resulted in the present situation at Canal Street, it was claimed. Because of the failure to

"A careful canvass indicates that with the exception of Britain, France and possibly Italy, who are friendly on every tradeable question, the League Council upholds the Irish contention."

Free State Refers to League

By Special Cable

DUBLIN, Dec. 19.—The Minister of External Affairs told the Irish Free State Daily today that a communication had been sent to the League of Nations expressing Free State opinion which contradicts the British interpretation of Article 18 of the treaty, but which is not to be published until received by the secretariat at Geneva.

A confidential communication has also been sent to the British Government. Desmond Fitzgerald stated, in reply to a question in the Dail, that the League would have to decide which interpretation was correct.

CANADA EXAMINING ITS CIVIL SERVICE

OTTAWA, Dec. 16 (Special Correspondence)—There are 39,000 people in the employ of the Canadian Government, according to a report just issued by a committee appointed last winter to investigate conditions throughout the federal civil service. The names of these employees, together with their nationality, salaries, positions, etc., are entered in what is called a "Domesday Book."

When the Government receives full reports from all departments and the Civil Service Commission, it is expected that the salary list will be placed on a permanent basis and the present system of extra bonuses to meet the high cost of living be dropped.

Metric System for Dutch East Indies

By Special Cable

THE HAGUE, Dec. 19.—The metric system will be used exclusively in the Dutch East Indies, by which Amsterdam pounds and piculs will be abolished, it was officially announced here yesterday.

Heretofore the two systems have been functioning side by side, but it is now held that experience shows that the metric system is preferable.

Board's Status Defined

Leroy T. Harkness, member of the state Transit Commission, outlined the financial situation of the New York transit lines at yesterday's hearing, tracing the situation of the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Company particularly from the date of the reversion of the old company (the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company) through the reorganization and the present status of the corporation.

He went into detail as to the outstanding bonds and stock of the company and the fixed charges which it must meet, this amounting to more than $10,000,000 annually, he said, irrespective of capital stock.

He stated that the functions of the Transit Commission did not include those of supervising the expenditure of $26,000,000 of new capital, adding that the Transit Commission's duties are regulatory, but that it cannot supervise the expenditure of the hands of the boards of directors.

The Brooklyn company's board has three representatives of the public on it, a policy which he commended as having the advantage of bringing into the situation public men of prominence who would have a voice in the policies of the companies. He also was questioned as to the sale of stock, but stated that this was a matter to which the Transit Commission had not gone, as it was beyond its power.

Germans Much Concerned Over Cologne Decision

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—The speech of Lord Curzon in London last night, forecasting that the Cologne area will not be evacuated Jan. 10, five years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of the Treaty of Versailles, is viewed with consternation by the German Foreign Office. Nonevacuation on that date, it is declared, would be regarded as a breach of the Versailles Treaty.

The Foreign Office takes the view that the triumphal reconstruction policy, which has constantly won over wider circles of the German population, will be abruptly halted and the direct inner political consequences ensue, if the Allies, without consulting the German Government, seek to make a decision not to evacuate.

The Foreign Office sees in Lord Curzon's statement evidence that the Allies already have agreed on their policy, and it considers the failure to negotiate with Germany as "extremely painful."

The forming of a new German government will be much more difficult, it is declared, if the Allies fail to treat Germany as a contracting party to the Treaty who must be heard before the contract can be altered.

WISCONSIN PARTY PATRONAGE WRESTED FROM LA FOLLETTE

Administration's Decision to Place Senator Lenroot in Control of Necessary Appointments Is Declared Only a Natural Result of Recent Campaign

Special from Monitor Bureau

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Party patronage in Wisconsin will be controlled by Irvine L. Lenroot, regular Republican Senator from that state, according to a decision arrived at by the Administration and party leaders.

This, it is pointed out, is natural and proper. Senator Robert M. La Follette deserted his party and sought to defeat it at the last election. In consequence he was "read out" of the party and will not be permitted to share in its responsibilities or its perquisites.

Until recently, Mr. La Follette, although often recalcitrant, has enjoyed the privilege of sharing in the distribution of federal patronage in his State. That he is no longer to do so was indicated yesterday when the names of 40 Wisconsin postmasters went to the Senate for confirmation, every one of whom had the approval of Mr. Lenroot.

It is learned that other appointments will have to be approved in the same quarter. "Batting Hob" will have to keep up his practices without the help of such patronage as lies within the control of the Administration in Washington.

Strengthening Lenroot

Not only are these tactics intended to weaken La Follette forces; they are designed to strengthen Mr. Lenroot, who has stood loyally by Mr. Coolidge in difficult circumstances. He will be up for re-election in 1926 and the Administration desires to have him sent back and not to have a man who would owe his first allegiance to Mr. La Follette. In brief, the Republican Party, backed by the Administration, proposes to try to wrest Wisconsin from radical control and to restore it to the Republican column.

The distribution of patronage will affect every quarter of the State, including as it does postmasters, federal judges, district attorneys, marshals, revenue and other agents. The control of these positions would enable the Republican organization to conduct its campaign for members of Congress in 1926 under much more favorable circumstances.

Mr. La Follette has been able to carry the representatives from his State with him on virtually every issue and with the Wisconsin delegation as a nucleus, the plans of the Progressives had been to make a successful come-back in 1926 and to deliver the balance of power in Congress into their own hands.

FARM PROBLEM 'NOT POLITICAL'

Better Marketing and Unity Rather Than Legislation Need, Says Leader

Special from Monitor Bureau

DES MOINES, Ia., Dec. 16 (Special Correspondence)—"The major steps toward the solution of the farmers' problems must be worked out here in America, independent of conditions in foreign lands," in the opinion of Louis J. Taber of Ohio, grand master of the National Grange and a member of the National commission recently appointed by President Coolidge. Mr. Taber came here to address the annual meeting of the Iowa State Grange.

"The development of better marketing methods, the recognition that orderly production is the first step in orderly marketing, and a reduction in the cost of government, might be mentioned as our cardinal problems," he said. "The proper enforcement of law, internal improvements with the betterment of agriculture in view, freight-rate readjustments and reduction, broadening of credit facilities, and stabilization of interest rates, sound conservation and forestry policy and a host of other issues demand attention. Overshadowing all others, however, is the problem of a better and more efficient agricultural organization, and correlation and teamwork of those now in the field."

"The farmer's problems are economic and not political. Their cure will come through adherence to sound business principles and not through legislation. We have contempt for the army of politicians who belittle the intelligence of the farmer by insisting that his prosperity is dependent on their support. True, the farmer needs legislation, but legislation at best is but an enabling act. Self help and not governmental help will secure real prosperity."

CORN BELT EXTENDED TO YUKON TERRITORY

OTTAWA, Dec. 16 (Special Correspondence)—The northward trek of Canada's corn belt has now reached the Yukon near the Alaskan boundary, where last summer a dwarf variety was grown. Particular success has attended the efforts of the Beaverbridge and Fort Vermilion Dominion Experimental stations in northern Alberta.

At the latter station, which is about 650 miles north of the international boundary, the Department of Agriculture has for a number of years conducted variety tests, with the more common varieties of field corn. These have ranged in yield of green material in 1922 from 15½ tons in the case of Wisconsin No. 7 to 24½ tons in the case of Longfellow. Under irrigated conditions at Lethbridge, in southern Alberta, as high as 48 tons of green fodder per acre has been secured.

Victoria, B. C.—The British Columbia Legislature, by a unanimous vote, decided to request the Canadian federal government to abrogate all international treaties which at this time prevent the Dominion from controlling opium importation.

RAILROAD EXECUTIVES WOULD UNITE GROUPS

Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The Eastern Presidents' Conference, representing railroads east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio and Potomac, at its regular monthly meeting here, invited executives of the southern executives to join its organization, and thus have one group including all roads east of the river.

A similar organization is maintained in the roads in the west, with headquarters in Chicago, and eastern executives feel that better results can be obtained in public relations work through a single organization in this territory. Labor stabilization also was discussed and the budget for next year, amounting to $115,000 for the public relations work, was authorized.

MUSCLE SHOALS VOTE UNLIKELY

Underwood Measure and Postal Bills Scheduled for "Unfinished Business"

Special from Monitor Bureau
WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Congress is packing up its pending legislation and unfinished business preparatory to going away for the holiday recess. Included are such controversial measures as the Muscle Shoals bill and the Postal Pay.

Long-drawn-out debate on the former measure indicates delay and possible defeat. Charles Curtis (R.), Senator from Kansas, sought unanimous consent for night sessions of the Senate to expedite legislation on this question. George W. Norris (R.), Senator from Nebraska, objected, stating that if "Senators think that an endurance test here is going to force an early vote they are mistaken." This comment made by the most bitter opponent of the Underwood bill gave color to the recent charge made by Oscar W. Underwood (D.), Senator from Alabama, that "there is an organized filibuster against this bill."

It admitted now that a vote may be deferred until January or possibly February with a prospect of its fading in the conference committee of the two houses.

Although President Coolidge has indicated his approval of the method embodied in the Underwood bill, it is not expected that he will go so far as to participate in any controversy of Congress. The fight as seen at close range has narrowed chiefly to a struggle between those who favor Government ownership and those who oppose it.

Many of the western Senators and practically all of the Progressives are keen on the Norris bill for Government operation and the defeat of the "trusts." If the Underwood bill does not go through, it is safe to say that the Norris bill will not, however. This Government would like to get Muscle Shoals off its hands. Will Congress let it? That is the question that is being asked on all sides.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—With the testimony of Edwin J. Clapp disclaiming any intention of reflecting on the integrity of Oscar W. Underwood (D.), Senator from Alabama, in an editorial he wrote for the Hearst morning newspapers of Dec. 13, including the Washington Herald, the Senate investigating committee has closed its inquiry into the matter. Senator Underwood had declared the editorial contained false references to him and his Muscle Shoals bill.

Mr. Clapp testified that the statement in the editorial that Senator Underwood's ability and statesmanship "have often been at the service of the railroads and the great corporations" was meant merely to convey the idea that he had supported legislation favorable to these because he believed in the plan of private operation of the country's resources.

The witness conceded that there was no specific statement in the Underwood bill, which the editorial said was one to lease Muscle Shoals to the Alabama Power Company, calling for its lease to that company. In the editorial's reference to President Coolidge not wanting "another Teapot Dome scandal," Mr. Clapp said he had not intended to convey the idea of any present conspiracy in connection with the Muscle Shoals, but a warning against opening the door to such a possibility.

CITROEN PARTY AT LAKE TCHAD

Possibilities of French Colonial Empire, Foreshadowed
By Special Cable
PARIS, Dec. 19.—The mastery of the Sahara Desert has been advanced by the new expedition organized by the Citroen concern. A message has been received from M. Haardt and Ardouin Dubreuil announcing that they have reached Lake Tchad, traversing for the first time only French territory.

Leaving Algeria they crossed the Sahara, went through French West Africa and the Niger colony. They propose to enter the Lake Tchad and continue the route toward the equator. Their goal is Timbuktu, which is the terminus of the Citroen's proposed excursions of caterpillar cars across the desert and by motor boats down the Niger.

Twice weekly M. Citroen will, if everything goes well, transport parties from Paris to Timbuktu. Great attention is being directed to this daring enterprise, which is also calculated to reveal the marvelous possibilities of the French colonial empire. It is held that there are vast possibilities for cotton growing if Lake Tchad is utilized by irrigation schemes.

Vast mineral resources are also indicated around the Sahara, while there are valuable trees and plants on the Niger and Cameroons. Domestic animals could be raised on a large scale. The native products only need a better outlet, and these expeditions bring the day of adequate transport facilities nearer.

JAPAN COMPLETES ARMY AND NAVY AVIATION PROGRAMS

TOKYO, Nov. 26 (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—The aviation programs of both the army and navy have been completed and submitted to the Cabinet for final approval. The army provides for three air corps, bombing, pursuit, and observation, each composed initially of three squadrons, but to be expanded later to four squadrons, to form a complete air regiment. Adequate expansion of the aviation schools is planned, and major-general is to replace the present colonel commanders.

In addition, two anti-aircraft gun corps will be formed, involving the expansion of anti-aircraft positions in various parts of the Empire. The Navy Department, whose original plan contemplates the addition of six corps to the existing 11 by 1929, now plans to complete its program in 1928. One corps is to be added next year, two in 1926, two in 1927, and one in 1928.

JAPANESE PRICES STAY AT HIGHEST

TOKYO, Nov. 29 (Special Correspondence).—Japan has made no concerted or effective effort to bring about a reduction of the prices that were sent soaring during war times. Daily necessities remain 120 per cent higher than the pre-war figure, whereas the average in England has dropped to 70 per cent and in New York to about 50 per cent. With the exchange value of the yen many points below par, the disparity between living costs in Tokyo and New York or London is even greater.

Wages for labor have kept pace with the soaring of retail and wholesale prices. The earthquake of a year and a half ago with its consequent enormous demand for coal workers in clearing away debris and restoring the city to normal forced wages still higher. The rebuilding work that has been going on feverishly since then has had the same effect.

ANTI-DRUG CRUSADE OPENS IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The International Narcotic Crusade, Inc., has opened offices at 156 Fifth Avenue for the purpose of establishing a national agency to urge adoption of laws placing the manufacture and sale of narcotic drugs under Government control. The crusade is a national movement to build and maintain a Government monopoly of the manufacture and sale of narcotic drugs.

"Chinese brawn and vision built a wondrous wall and a more wondrous civilization," said Mrs. Angela C. Kaufman, director of the organization. "Where are the brawn and vision of America today? A little flower took them away. It took 4000 years to bring China to her present condition but America always does things with greater speed. Public sentiment can come only from public enlightenment. Education must come through the press, motion pictures, platform, pulpit and all other agencies of education."

CALCUTTA, Dec. 19.—It is understood that the Mahsuds, who were concerned in the recent attack on the South Waziristan Scouts when a British officer was killed and six Sepoys wounded, have agreed to pay 1500 rupees and to surrender 20 rifles, and compliance is promised within a week. The Mahsuds suffered severely in the engagement, so that the promise is considered adequate.

NEW COALITION URGED IN BERLIN

Combination of Center Party and Democrats Is Now Being Discussed

BERLIN, Dec. 19 (AP).—Finding themselves unable to form a government commanding a Reichstag majority, the President, Friedrich Ebert, and the Chancellor, Dr. Wilhelm Marx, today agreed to discontinue their efforts until shortly before the Reichstag meeting on January 5, the Marx-Stresemann Cabinet meanwhile continuing to function.

By Special Cable

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—The Cabinet problem is now expected to be held in suspense until after Christmas. Dr. Wilhelm Marx spent last yesterday conferring with various parties who conceivably might form a government, but without result, as each one clung stubbornly to his own particular tenets. He has an appointment with the President today, but it is considered doubtful whether steps will be taken immediately.

The latest combination discussed in political circles is a temporary coalition of Democrats and Roman Catholics, which, although hopeless, is in a minority, would be supported by Socialists, and perhaps tolerated conditionally by the German People's Party and several of the smaller parties.

The situation has become even more complicated by the Bavarian People's Party's apparent desire to favor a bourgeois coalition, which becomes impossible owing to the refusal of the Roman Catholics to join it and by the Democrats' growing unwillingness to enter a coalition including the German People's Party. They now want the re-establishment of the so-called "Virth or Weimar" coalition of Democrats and Social Democrats.

The Prussian question is making matters even more complicated, since there is a certain tendency among the parties to compromise rivals for concessions affecting the Reich Government by giving them more influence in Prussia. It is hoped in political circles here that after the holidays parties will be less intransigent than at present, especially in view of the necessity of calling the Reichstag at the beginning of January, as demanded by the Constitution.

Protectionists Protest Alleged Du Pont Propaganda Against Plan

The Massachusetts Fish and Game Protective Association in behalf of the Game Refuge Bill today sent a telegram to the president of the Du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, Inc., protesting against attacks on the bill, alleged to have been made by employees of the powder company. A copy of the telegram follows:

Today received attack on Game Refuge Bill from Du Pont Powder Company. It is a gross insult to the sportsmen of this State and to the Game Refuge Bill.

The Game Refuge Bill will provide refuges which are absolutely necessary and which can be secured in no other way. It provides for desired law enforcement and for shooting sportsmen, and it is a system which has been successfully and conclusively demonstrated during twenty years in Pennsylvania.

Statements in attack are false and will be so proved. Attack on Federal Bureau Biological Survey most unjust and strongly protested. Opposition to interests of sportsmen of average means will create great opposition to your propaganda and your interests.

This Association has passed official resolutions in favor of Game Refuge Bill at annual meetings and public hearings. A recent questionnaire shows 94 per cent of members favoring the bill, and actively interested in and in favor of bill. The local clubs have passed similar resolutions. AUSTIN, Tex., Dec. 8 (Special Correspondence).—Singing to gain the attention of his audience is the device often employed by Dr. Matthias Kuehne, professor of physics at the University of Texas, when he is scheduled to deliver a lecture to a group of school children.

"Most children love music," Mr. Kuehne said. "They don't get enough music in their school life, though educators are realizing more and more the practical value of music in the schoolroom. Never have I failed to get close attention after singing to a class of children."

President's Economy Program Observed at Cabinet Dinner

Custom of Calling in Outside Caterer Is Abandoned at First State Function of White House Social Season—Regular Chef Presides

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Cabinet dinner, first of the state functions of the White House social season, was given last night by President and Mrs. Coolidge.

Food cooked by the White House chef and his assistants was served instead of a spread prepared by a caterer brought in from the outside for the occasion.

Expensive caterers have been retained by previous White House occupants for the four state dinners of the social season, but President and Mrs. Coolidge have abandoned the practice.

No reasons for the change were forthcoming from the White House, but there were intimations that it was a part of the President's economy program. Funds for the state dinners are provided in the President's travel and entertainment allowance, of which the unexpended balance is returned annually to the treasury.

The guests, in addition to the members of the Cabinet, included Charles E. Warren (R.), Senator from Wyoming; and Mrs. Warren; William E. Borah (R.), Senator from Idaho; and Mrs. Borah; James W. Wadsworth Jr. (R.), Senator from New York; and Mrs. Wadsworth; Charles Curtis (R.), Senator from Kansas; William M. Butler (R.), Senator from Massachusetts; and Mrs. Butler; Martin B. Madden (R.), Representative from Illinois; Nicholas Longworth (R.), Representative from Ohio; Bertrand H. Snell (R.), Representative from New York; and Mrs. Snell; Everett Sanders (R.), Representative from Indiana; and Mrs. Sanders; Mrs. Mae E. Nolan (R.), Representative from California; Briz-Gon, Herbert M. Lord, Director of the Budget; and Mrs. Lord; Colonel and Mrs. George Harvey; Mr. and Mrs. John Hays Hammond; C. Bascom Slemmons, secretary to the President; Mrs. Eugene Hale, Mrs. Frederick Dent Grant, and Mrs. Edward B. McLean.

FRANCO-GERMAN TRADE PARLEYS TO BE SUSPENDED

PARIS, Dec. 19.—The Franco-German commercial negotiations will be suspended tomorrow until after Christmas. The Germans wanted a recess until after the New Year, but the French are desirous of coming to at least a partial conclusion before Jan. 10, when all the present commercial arrangements between the two countries come to an end.

The Germans thus far have stoutly resisted the French demands for concessions said to have been promised Edouard Herriot in London; they insist that complications with other countries would result if they favored France in their tariffs.

There are still strong hopes in French circles of bringing the Germans to a reasonable view of the situation, but the prospects now are that nothing important will be accomplished before expiration of the time during which Alsatian products are admitted free of duty by Germany.

JUGOSLAVS OPPOSE SOVIET PROPAGANDA

By Special Cable
BELGRADE, Dec. 19.—Circles which are near the Government attach much importance to the journey of the Yugoslav Foreign Minister, Dr. Ninichitch to Rome and Paris, in connection with the decision of the great European states to combat Bolshevik propaganda. This will have a repercussion also in the internal politics of Yugoslavia, and play an important part in the election of February 8. The Government will undertake measures against all parties having connections with the Soviet, for example the Raditch party. According to news received here, the Albanian rebels have occupied several towns among which are Kriema and Fishkopia. A well-informed person told The Christian Science Monitor representative that several notorious Bolshevik agitators had been organized at Vienna into a Soviet committee for the Balkans for propaganda purposes.

LATIN-AMERICAN
VACCINE RULES
PIQUE TOURISTS

Ship Lines Urge Modification of Restrictions to Spur Travel

Special from Monitor Bureau
NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—Requirements of South American countries by which a visitor from the United States must carry a certificate from a board of health showing that the traveler has been vaccinated, are the subject of keen opposition by steamship companies operating to such countries. Efforts have been made to induce these nations—notably Argentina and Brazil—to modify their regulations, particularly in the cases of the winter tourists, who often spend less than two weeks in such countries, but thus far little progress has been made.

Speaking for the Grace Line, which operates fast ships from New York to the west coast of South America as well as from Seattle and New Orleans to this territory, Harold H. Gallison, passenger traffic manager, stated to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor:

"I wish we could alleviate these conditions. I have been to the ambassadors of Brazil and Argentina, but they say that our requirements are twice as stringent as theirs."

Two Weeks Visé Sought
"I have tried to obtain a tourist visa, good for two weeks' stay in these countries which enforce the vaccination regulations, which will not be subject to such rules, but have not been successful as yet. I also mentioned this to James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, when he departed recently for South America, and am hopeful that he will go into the matter."

F. M. Wolf, passenger traffic manager of the Munson Line, managing operators for the United States Shipping Board in the South American trade, in which service it maintains four express steamships between New York and Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo and Buenos Aires, was particularly interested when informed that complaint had been made by travelers against the requirements for admission of tourists "of course we'd like to have these regulations modified," he said.

He stated that efforts had been made by him and his company to accomplish this, but that nothing definite had resulted. In common with several other passenger officials of lines operating to South American points, he declared that many prospective passengers might abandon a voyage by reason of these rules, and that an exemption would doubtless attract persons who may be deterred by the present rigidity of the vaccination laws.

Modification Urged
P. H. Heard of the Lamport & Holt Line disagreed, however, as to the number of prospective passengers who might be lost by reason of the requirement. "We have endeavored to have the rule modified," he said, "but we feel that it cannot be done."

He asserted that to obtain a certificate for an old vaccination was not difficult.

The regulations, as given in the schedules of the Grace Line, state: "A vaccination certificate is required for every passenger to Peru and Chile, whether in transit or otherwise."

"For Argentina: Statement of character from police department, letter of recommendation, vaccination certificate from Board of Health, photographs, etc."

"For Brazil: Vaccination certificate from Board of Health, etc."

"For Chile: Vaccination certificate, police certificate, health certificate, etc."

"For Colombia: Certificate of good health."

"For Uruguay: Vaccination certificates."

Panama and Peru do not have regulations of this character, according to the information furnished by the steamship companies. The rules, it is said, are strictly enforced, and the same situation exists regardless of what line one may use or what one's reason for making a trip to South America may be.

Some persons have determined to forgo trips to South America because of these requirements, according to reports which have reached The Christian Science Monitor. Steamship men, in general, are willing to co-operate in any way possible with an effort which may be made toward an alleviation of a regulation which is considered unwarranted and objectionable by many travelers. They realize, as do the prospective voyagers, that doctors disagree as to the merits of vaccination and, also, that there have been many cases of smallpox, especially among children, in the United States who have been subjected to inoculation.

FEMINISTS TAKE
FORWARD STEPSEnergetic Fight for Rights
Advocated Without Disturbances

BELGRADE, Dec. 1 (Special Correspondence).—The congress of the Women's Little Entente, held lately at Belgrade, represents an important event in the feminist movement.

By slow but certain steps the feminists of Yugoslavia are going forward. Every year sees some manifestation which proves that the ranks of enlightened women in this country are rapidly filling up. This year is the first time that an international meeting of feminist societies has been held at Belgrade.

The members of the Women's Little Entente agreed that their fight for the rights of women should be kept energetic, but at the same time moderate and avoiding anything that might lead to public disturbances.

The sitting dealing with political questions was held in camera. As far as can be ascertained, it was agreed that the Women's Little Entente should be inspired with the ideal of pacifism. It stands for the principle that there are not sufficiently strong reasons for armed conflict between neighboring states, and inclined toward the gathering together of the women of all the nations of eastern Europe in as strong a rapprochement as possible in political matters.

Only by a complete understanding of the nations can it be realized that their common salvation lies in universal peace, which is the road toward human progress. This women's congress was more strongly than ever of the opinion that international relations will be much more stable when parliaments of all countries contain a large number of women members.

The women of Poland and Czechoslovakia are already able to influence directly their parliaments, and in other countries, even where women have not yet got the franchise, they can make their opinion publicly felt.

DRUG STORE SALE

Texas Dries to Demand Curb
From Legislature

DALLAS, Tex., Dec. 12 (Special Correspondence).—The Anti-Saloon League of Texas and other friends of prohibition are preparing data to be submitted to the Legislature in support of a proposed bill to curb the sale of whisky on physicians' prescriptions. The greater part of the whisky sold through the drug stores, it was charged by the Anti-Saloon League, is obtained for strictly beverage purposes. It was declared that the amount of whisky sold during the holidays in Dallas has been far in excess of the average at other seasons.

In Texas there are 1800 physicians authorized to write liquor prescriptions. Approximately 400,000 prescriptions blanks are issued a year. The average charge for a liquor prescription by the 300 authorized physicians in Dallas is $3, while the whisky sells at from $3 to $4 a pint at the drug stores.

Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson, Governor-elect, has indicated that she would favor a bill to restrict the indiscriminate issuance of such prescriptions.

Atticus Webb, head of the Anti-Saloon League of Texas, with headquarters in Dallas, is organizing the forces to get legislative action on this subject.

CRAMTON BILL
HEARING HELDUnification of Dry Work in
Treasury Department
Bureau Urged

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Cramton bill, proposing to unite all prohibition work in one bureau, under the Treasury Department, was the subject of further hearings called today before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Though favorably reported to the Senate at the close of last session, the measure, previously passed by the House, was returned to committee for further hearings at the request of users of industrial alcohol. The committee planned after today's session to adjourn over the holiday recess when additional hearings are to be held.

Samuel C. Henry, of Chicago, secretary of the National Association of Retail Druggists, declared the measure would cause serious annoyance to business men. He suggested inclusion in the bill of a plan for a board of review which would have authority to hear appeals from the prohibition commissioner.

With inclusion of the suggested amendments, Mr. Henry said his association would not oppose the bill further.

J. J. Britt, chief counsel of the prohibition unit, argued the proper enforcement of the law called for a separate bureau. He said the present system was beneath the dignity of the law. Imposition of civil service requirements for prohibition agents would improve the service, he declared.

Charles L. Reese, president of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers, protested the proposal to join supervision of the alcohol industry with the policing units of the Prohibition unit. He also asked amendments authorizing a Board of Review and a separate division to handle alcohol permits and manufacture.

Secretary Watching Progress of Colorado River Project

Special from Monitor Bureau
WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The general soundness of business conditions is apparent to those in close touch with industry. It is indicated by Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce. There has been a steady upward motion of the economic pendulum, but there is nothing approaching "boom" conditions to cause apprehension of a succeeding slump, it was pointed out. It is known that Mr. Hoover looks favorably upon the proposed national survey of production, which is contemplated and which would be made by a committee headed by Owen D. Young. He feels, however, that any such survey should include also an investigation of distribution.

Mr. Hoover is maintaining his interest in the Colorado River situation. It was indicated at the Commerce Department while proponents of the compact for apportioning the waters of the Colorado equably among the seven states involved hope that Arizona will ratify the pact when its Legislature meets in January, they are casting about for an alternative if the compact fails of ratification.

Miss Ida M. Sears of No. 167 Blue Hill Avenue, a member of the Milton Congregational Church, is the winner of the $25 prize offered by the Greater Boston Federation of Churches for the best essay on the topic, "Why Come to Church?" the federation announced today.

Second place was won by Clara H. Parker of No. 180 Parkway, Winchester, and third by H. Durand Downward of No. 1131 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge.

The winning essay follows:

"Why come to church?"

"Because the church needs me, my presence, my influence, my help, to sustain and carry on its public worship, its various activities in the church and in the community, and in co-operation with others, to do my part in bringing in the kingdom of God in the world."

LIQUOR FLASK
SALE STOPPEDColumbus Stores Withdraw
Articles in Support of
Law Enforcement

COLUMBUS, O., Dec. 19 (Special).—Two Columbus department stores have wiped their counters clean of hip pocket whisky flasks for the holiday trade. The Dunn-Taft store and the Boston Store there have refused to invite customers to violate national prohibition. Officials of these stores and several business men connected with other retail stores have made statements urging every encouragement to be given such support of law enforcement.

The step taken by the two stores was voluntary. It was without consideration of a survey by the Franklin County W. C. T. U., a committee of which visited all the large stores and reported many were selling flasks. A resolution protesting against such sales was adopted by the organization.

Matter of Right and Wrong
E. F. Dunn of the Dunn-Taft Department Store, who ordered the whisky flasks withdrawn from the shelves, said he was not in sympathy with such sales, as they mean only one thing; the man who buys them is going to put whisky in them and we are helping him to violate the law probably more easily than he could otherwise. It is simply drawing a line between what is right and wrong in business.

The Boston Store, in addition to flatly refusing to traffic in hip flasks, will not place orders for individual customers. R. E. Eline, advertising manager of the Boston Store, expressed himself as follows:

This store believes in being as honorable and law abiding in principle and precept as it expects individuals to be with whom it does business. If we show disrespect for one law how can we insist upon obedience to other laws? It simply would be picking out such laws to obey as we see would redound to our personal and financial advantage. We do not feel that the considerable customers in the city of Columbus who visit our store would be in sympathy with any such subterfuge. We encourage our customers to encourage the Eighteenth Amendment. I am sure it would be offensive to them, and in addition to that view I take the personal stand that a mercantile house of good reputation must be an example to others.

A Moral Victory
H. P. Plateau, vice-president and general manager of the Z. L. White Company, said he was in favor of discouraging the display of hip-pocket flasks in stores. "The money stores would lose would be of such little consequence and the moral victory would be ours."

LIQUOR FLASK
SALE STOPPEDColumbus Stores Withdraw
Articles in Support of
Law Enforcement

COLUMBUS, O., Dec. 19 (Special).—Two Columbus department stores have wiped their counters clean of hip pocket whisky flasks for the holiday trade. The Dunn-Taft store and the Boston Store there have refused to invite customers to violate national prohibition. Officials of these stores and several business men connected with other retail stores have made statements urging every encouragement to be given such support of law enforcement.

The step taken by the two stores was voluntary. It was without consideration of a survey by the Franklin County W. C. T. U., a committee of which visited all the large stores and reported many were selling flasks. A resolution protesting against such sales was adopted by the organization.

Matter of Right and Wrong
E. F. Dunn of the Dunn-Taft Department Store, who ordered the whisky flasks withdrawn from the shelves, said he was not in sympathy with such sales, as they mean only one thing; the man who buys them is going to put whisky in them and we are helping him to violate the law probably more easily than he could otherwise. It is simply drawing a line between what is right and wrong in business.

The Boston Store, in addition to flatly refusing to traffic in hip flasks, will not place orders for individual customers. R. E. Eline, advertising manager of the Boston Store, expressed himself as follows:

This store believes in being as honorable and law abiding in principle and precept as it expects individuals to be with whom it does business. If we show disrespect for one law how can we insist upon obedience to other laws? It simply would be picking out such laws to obey as we see would redound to our personal and financial advantage. We do not feel that the considerable customers in the city of Columbus who visit our store would be in sympathy with any such subterfuge. We encourage our customers to encourage the Eighteenth Amendment. I am sure it would be offensive to them, and in addition to that view I take the personal stand that a mercantile house of good reputation must be an example to others.

A Moral Victory
H. P. Plateau, vice-president and general manager of the Z. L. White Company, said he was in favor of discouraging the display of hip-pocket flasks in stores. "The money stores would lose would be of such little consequence and the moral victory would be ours."

Why Come to Church' Prize Essay Contest Winners Are Announced
In Boston Federation of Churches Award Leading Contributor Stresses Institution's Stand for "the Invisible Things, the Eternal Realities"

Miss Ida M. Sears of No. 167 Blue Hill Avenue, a member of the Milton Congregational Church, is the winner of the $25 prize offered by the Greater Boston Federation of Churches for the best essay on the topic, "Why Come to Church?" the federation announced today.

Second place was won by Clara H. Parker of No. 180 Parkway, Winchester, and third by H. Durand Downward of No. 1131 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge.

The winning essay follows:

"Why come to church?"

"Because the church needs me, my presence, my influence, my help, to sustain and carry on its public worship, its various activities in the church and in the community, and in co-operation with others, to do my part in bringing in the kingdom of God in the world."

FRANCE QUESTIONS ETHICS OF ORIGIN OF PARTY FUNDS

M. Herriot Authorizes Thorough Inquiry Into Whole System of Financing, Whether Source Be Radical, Nationalist or Socialist

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON

PARIS, Dec. 7 (Special Correspondence) — France is discussing the ethics of politicians receiving financial aid from business organizations. The matter as it arises is not only unpleasant but dangerous for the Herriot Government. Not that the Radical Party is worse than the Bloc National in this respect; on the contrary, the Bloc National has openly allied itself with the Union des Interêts Economiques, known as the "Billet organisation," because M. Billiet is the leading figure in it. But the case of the Radicals is particularly unfortunate because they have denounced in unmeasured terms the whole system of financial aid from bodies of this kind, and therefore it can be shown that they have profited to any considerable extent by the contributions of these associations. It is held that they will be convicted of hypocrisy.

M. Herriot, whose hands are clean, has agreed to a thorough inquiry into the whole system of party finance. There will be an attempt to determine from what sources not only the Radicals, but the Nationalists, obtained the wherewithal to fight the last elections. There will be an attempt to determine how the Socialists, who appear to be poor, paid their expenses. It is freely suggested that the Communists received financial aid from Russia, and there is even vague talk of German money.

Thorough Probe Desirable
It is surely to be hoped that the probe will be thorough. It is a pity that it was thought necessary to confine the investigation to the last elections; the chief allegations that have been made are in respect of the elections of 1919, but M. Léon Blum, speaking for the Socialists, urged it would be unfair to go back to 1919, because the confusion of parties was then great.

The circumstances, it is argued, have changed. In 1919 the fight was against Socialism, and it may well be, therefore, that a number of Radicals ranged themselves with the Bloc National, as against the Socialist Party. But in the more normal days of 1924 the Socialists and the Radicals joined hands. The point of view of the Nationalists is that what was considered to be right in 1919 cannot now be condemned as wrong—and even illegal—by the same Radicals who worked with the Union only a few years ago. The Nationalists declare that it would indeed be wrong to receive subsidies from a foreign country, but that for any national interests, which so choose, to provide funds is not only legitimate, but is desirable, in the existing democracy.

Not a Party Organization
Now the Union des Interêts Economiques was not strictly a party organization, although it chiefly served the purpose of the Bloc National. It was, however, ready to help anybody who joined in the fight against Socialism. Its program was clearly and publicly defined; it acted openly. It was distributed—not merely from the large business firms but from small traders who had become alarmed at the growth of certain doctrines.

All this, it holds, is fair fighting, and at any rate the Radicals as well as the Nationalists are involved. In its turn it would like to know from what less available sources other parties have derived their funds.

Now the Radical outcry against the "Union des Interêts Economiques" is somewhat deprecated by the present discussions—was based on the affirmation that the intervention of economic interests in Parliament is not corrupt in itself, almost certainly a means of corruption.

The Radicals have protested against the Union on the ground that what it offered was in the nature of bribes to individual members of Parliament to vote in favor of this or that particular business interest. How far the charge of corruption could be sustained it would be difficult to state dogmatically, but that there is, in fact, a possibility of corruption can hardly be denied.

Montevideo Erects Two New Public Monuments

Landscape of Uruguay Recalls the Charms of Rural France; Its Beaches the Resort of Three Nations

By WALLACE THOMPSON

Montevideo, Uruguay
Special Correspondence
THE landscape of Uruguay reminds the visitor of France. The same rolling hills, the same white roads, the same dwarfed fruit trees, the same round haystacks, the same groups of little farmhouses or shops at the crossroads, the same big-wheeled carts with peasants in little caps, and if you will, the same roaring American motor trucks which are entwined with the picture most young Americans now has of the French countryside.

This is, of course, close to Montevideo, where the country is filled with little farms, but out in the wide estancias where the cattle and sheep roam a thousand miles, the country is the same, rolling and green. On the estancias, too, are the rows of trees along the edge of the horizon—although in most of Uruguay, as in coastal Argentina, the trees are all hand-planted. Uruguay is a rich country, as well as beautiful, lying as it does between two or in fact three of the great rivers of South America, and with the rolling, well-drained uplands which Argentina crosses the River Plate, so astonishingly lacks. In size Uruguay is about equal to New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and

Rhode Island combined, and although it has only about a tenth of the population of those states (1,500,000), it is still the most densely populated country in South America, with about 21 to the square mile. Incidentally, while it is about 15 times the size of Connecticut, Uruguay has 30 times the area of arable land that Connecticut has, and the fine annual rainfall of 37 inches is distributed through the year with remarkable uniformity.

The center of the life of this pleasant country is this capital, Montevideo, with a population of about 365,000 people. The second largest city of the country has only about 25,000, so the preponderance of the capital is unquestioned. Nor does it carry its honors unworthily, for Montevideo is one of the most charming, friendly and quaint of all the cities of South America. Cleanliness seems to fit it like a neat white glove. It has a number of rare old colonial buildings and historic landmarks and it has even gone so far in its self-respect and love of things which are essentially its own as to have preserved almost unchanged from Spanish days the lovely colonnaded porticoes which skirted the chief of its old plazas. The whole city, old and new, has been laid out on the most generous scale, and one really superb avenue, called the Eighteenth of July (Independence Day), cuts magnificently through the heart of the town. Buildings of size are springing up, and on one corner of the Plaza Independencia is rising the highest reinforced building in the world—225 feet high, topping one in Detroit by a score or more feet.

Two New Public Monuments

The fact of the matter is that Montevideo, although it has spread itself over an immense amount of territory, still believes in concentrating its spectacular features. It has (besides the concrete building noted) two of the finest public monuments in the world. One is a superb bronze statue, the other is the new Hall of Congress, just building. The statue stands in the center of the Plaza Independencia, upon a block of black Uruguayan granite 50 feet high and is a bronze equestrian of elegant proportions—one of the largest if not the largest ever cast.

General José Artigas, the Spanish army officer who took up the cause of Uruguayan independence and became the great hero of the early wars against Spain. It stands alone and without distracting elements in the midst of a beautiful little park, lined far away, by those fine colonnaded porticoes of old time, while the happy, friendly, urbane Uruguayans pass in colorful crowds beneath its lordly shadow.

The other monument, the Hall of Congress, will not be finished for a year or perhaps two. It stands a short distance away from the center of the city, on a slight eminence, and will be surrounded by a wide park made of ground which has already been condemned and dedicated to that purpose. It is built of Uruguayan marble, a most beautiful stone of great variety. The entire exterior is of a pink, softly grained marble, unsmoothed and unpolished, giving an effect of airy beauty almost indescribable. The interior, approached through many imposing flights of steps and through porticoes in which the working of the stone becomes richer and richer, centers in a superb Roman hall of polished marble. Its cruciform walls are a very riot of magnificent colored columns and blocks, polished and fitted and harmonized, fully 20 different types, from the black edging of the checkered floors to the pinks and greens and browns and golden yellows of the panels. In the halls of the Senate and the House of Representatives the use of the Argentine peso is used here, as the Argentine peso goes only as far, according to the traveler, as the Chilean peso worth 10 cents, the natural and logical conclusion is that the 50 cents Uruguayan peso goes only as far as the Chilean 10-cent peso. Which is not literally the case, but near enough so that there is considerable poverty in this beautiful city, and the tender heart and the skilled touch of the hotel servants are likely to extract as many pesos in tips, at least, as were extracted in the cheaper pesos elsewhere.

Resort of Three Nations

The beaches, which are the pride of the city and the merca, indeed, of the vacationists of Argentina and Brazil, are built up with miles of charming chalets, and the one famous promenade where all the world of Montevideo gathers is lined with fine cafés and amusement places. One of the finest beach hotels in South America is maintained, with a charming park of green and gravel, by the municipality—with the guests, however, paying charges which make them well aware that they are at the socially proper place.

In fact, the cost of living in Montevideo is one of the surprises which await the visitor. From the baggage and taxicab handouts who impress on every visitor the fact that he is a tourist and fair game, to the excellent hotels and the many attractive little shops, the "cost of living" in Uruguay is well labeled. Much of the money for the handsome public buildings comes from very high import duties, and everything from "The Right Protection for Every Risk" abroad (and there are as yet virtually no manufactures) is very costly. The result is that, roughly speaking, the Uruguayan peso, which is worth about 85 cents, goes about as far as the Argentine peso at 35 cents. As the Argentine peso goes only as far, according to the traveler, as the Chilean peso worth 10 cents, the natural and logical conclusion is that the 50 cents Uruguayan peso goes only as far as the Chilean 10-cent peso. Which is not literally the case, but near enough so that there is considerable poverty in this beautiful city, and the tender heart and the skilled touch of the hotel servants are likely to extract as many pesos in tips, at least, as were extracted in the cheaper pesos elsewhere.

But the life of Montevideo is too charming to be spoiled by anything like the cost of travel. The Uruguayans are frankly glad to see visitors. They smile, always, and there is always a pleasant word to be exchanged over the merest incident on the street. Everyone, from great public men to the simplest shopkeeper, is approachable, self-respecting, interested in you and interested that you shall like him and like his fine country. Uruguay, in a word, has charm and tact, those essentials of profound and lasting success in this old world.

In Arkansas Hills

Leaving the bridle trail we had been following we turned our horses' heads up the hillside and the way became very rocky and we wound in and out among the trees, dodging this way and that to avoid the lower branches. Such a trip, however, was a common experience for our shaggy hill-ponies and they steadily carried us higher and higher. Presently we neared the top and after dismounting and tying our horses my guide led me a few steps farther and we came out on the top of a low cliff. I shrank back in amazement, for the vague description I had heard of the place had not prepared me for the vast chaos that lay before me. It looked as if the entire hilltop had fallen in, forming a huge amphitheater and in this amphitheater there was nothing but rocks, heaped in indescribable confusion. Great boulders were strewn about as if by some giant hand, broad slabs lay here and there and others, tilted at every conceivable angle, piled over each other on all sides. At one place the indefatigable forces of erosion had carved a grotesque image and nearby a jagged spur rose toward the leaden sky where a long line of crows swiftly winged their way in absolute silence.

What force could have caused a scene of such wildness and desolation? Certainly the place is not of volcanic origin, for the rock is entirely of sedimentary formation, and nothing in the neighborhood suggests a volcanic past. It is known locally as the "Wolf Cave." F. F. G.

PHI BETA KAPPA TO HONOR '76 FOUNDERS WITH MEMORIAL

Will Erect Building on Campus at William and Mary College—Elaborate Program for Scholarships Outlined

Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, Dec. 16—A contract has been approved and will probably be let before the end of the year for the construction at the College of William and Mary at Williamsburg, Va., of a building to commemorate the 50 men who in 1776 founded there the honorary Phi Beta Kappa society. A fund of about $100,000 is being collected for the erection of the memorial, and with the help of an anonymous donor, this is sufficiently sure so that the construction may begin at once.

Will Have Raleigh Room

The building is to be of red brick and in the general style of the others on the William and Mary campus. It is to contain an auditorium available for the college, a replica of the Apollo room of the Raleigh Tavern in which the society is believed to have been organized, rooms for the entertainment of guests, and a room to accommodate the exhibition of Phi Beta Kappa memorabilia.

As part of the move to give the society a national home, there is also planned an endowment fund to maintain a national headquarters and to enlarge the scope of the activities in promoting scholarship. The campaign, which is to run for three more years, aims at obtaining from each of the 40,000 members an annual contribution of $5 for five years, which would raise $1,000,000. The anonymous benefactor who inspired the campaign has promised to add each year an amount equal to 10 per cent of that subscribed by the other members in that year.

Scholarship Program

When it is seen how large a fund will be available, it is proposed in establish scholarships and fellowships and to promote research in all branches of learning. The society will work through high schools, colleges and universities to insure that the most promising students are given adequate opportunities for developing their abilities. The publication of scholarly treatises and reports of researches will also be carried on.

The organization recently has been completed of the Phi Beta Kappa Foundation to carry out the purposes of the endowment. The regents of the University of the State of New York this year granted a provisional charter incorporating the society, which will be made absolute five years later if at that time the regents are convinced that it has the funds and organization necessary to carry out its purposes.

Five members constituted the first board of trustees, including Darwin P. Kingsley of the New York Life Insurance Company, John H. Finley, former New York State Commissioner of Education, Miss Virginia C. Gildersleeve, dean of Barnard College, Albert Shaw, editor of the American Review of Reviews, and Tolcott Williams, director emeritus of the School of Journalism of Columbia University.

The officers of the trustees of the Foundation elected for the current year ending December, 1925, include Darwin P. Kingsley, chairman, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., vice-chairman, Oscar M. Voorhees, secretary, and David Layton, treasurer.

Delaware Finds Honor System Successful at New Castle

Warden Elmer J. Leach Reports Fewer Escapes, Actual Reformatations, an End to Drug and Liquor Traffic

In view of the many articles which have appeared linking Delaware's penal system with the shipping post, it is of particular interest to learn of the shipping post in this prison is now rare. The post itself has shrunk from a huge wooden column in a conspicuous place to a pair of bars kept in the background.

DELAWARE is maintaining a penal institution which is gradually gaining the studios attention of criminologists and other authorities on crime prevention in all parts of the United States. The object of this widespread scrutiny is a system of administration that is making good men out of bad ones by putting the entire prison body entirely on its honor to regulate and discipline itself.

The plan in actual operation seems so idealistic as to be astonishing to those who examine it for the first time, for here one finds a prison population of 400, including more than 50 "lifers" and other long-term men, with only three guards, who are not armed; a prison without walls, excepting an obviously negotiable fence around a recreation ground between two of the wings; a labor system providing for the employment of one-third of the inmates, without guards, on farms from three to 10 miles away from the institution proper; and a warden who does not hesitate to send a group of his men across a state line, up into Pennsylvania, in a motor truck, to buy provisions, entrusting them with enough money to pay the bills. It is also surprising to find the inmates of a prison addressed by their names, instead of by numbers; to see them attired in civilian clothes, and permitted to move about freely and naturally when not engaged in the prison shops or in the performance of institution duties.

So unusual is the atmosphere of the institution that one at first is likely to suspect that some agent has superseded calm judgment in the development of the system, but a half hour's conversation with the warden, Elmer J. Leach, is sufficient to show that, while the humanitarian note is conspicuously evident, it has not been carried to the point of sentimental pampering of men who deserve punishment for deliberate violations of the law.

Mordecai S. Plummer, back of the honor system is a philosophy and a plan, both of which were bequeathed to the present warden by his predecessor, Mordecai S. Plummer, who directed the institution from May 1, 1920, until Dec. 21, 1922, when he passed away. Mr. Plummer's philosophy was drawn from the Bible, and his plan from observations during his many years of service as a United States Post Office Inspector. From the Bible he learned that the Golden Rule is a thing to be applied in the practical, everyday affairs of life, not merely to be admired as a system of conduct to be realized in some world to come. From his experience as a post office inspector he learned that there was a spark of good in the heart of the worst criminal on earth, and that it could be reached and stimulated by treating him as a human being.

The honor system which he initiated at the New Castle County Workhouse, situated six miles from Wilmington, is a happy and courageous combination of the two. Although he had dealt with criminals during the greater part of his life, and was known pre-eminently as a practical man, rather than as an idealist, he came to the workhouse not only with his humanitarian plan of administration, but with an intense aversion to prevailing systems of prison administration throughout the country. In Mr. Leach he found a sympathetic deputy warden who shared his views, and, inasmuch as the plan had become a success, it was only natural that Mr. Leach should have moved up by the board of trustees when the originator of the system passed on.

Object: To Reform

"To understand the purpose of this system you must understand our idea of what a prison is for," explains Mr. Leach, "and to appreciate its results you must study our records during the last five years, as contrasted with those under the old system when we had a force of 15 heavily armed guards and a set of rules and regulations which limited and irritated the inmates at every turn and during every minute of the day. Our object is to reform men, not merely to punish them. We believe that if a man is released from a jail still in a criminal state of mind, no matter how long he has been confined or how rigorously he has been disciplined, the jail has failed in its obligations to society. We conceive our primary duty to be the protection of society against the repetition of a crime after a man has been set free. We want to subject our inmates to a spiritual and mental rebirth. You cannot do that by treating them like elemental beasts. We have learned that if you put a criminal on his honor he will conduct himself honorably, and will help you in making the other criminals around him conduct themselves honorably; if you give him half a chance he will 'come back' and devote the remainder of his life to some useful purpose. By aiming at complete reformation, rather than at mere routine punishment, we believe we are serving society by actually reducing the criminal element."

The system in operation rests upon two groups of especially trusted men, one group known as the "tier men" and the other comprising the Honor Court. For each tier of cells there is an inmate tier man who is held responsible for the conduct of the men in his tier while they are entering or leaving their cells. He rises before the others in the morning and is the last to retire at night. At both times he takes a careful check of the inmates and reports to the lone, unarmed paid guard in the "center." There are 16 tier men, several of whom are serving life sentences, and all of whom are serving 10 years or more. While at work in the shops on the farm, the inmates are under the surveillance of "committees." When either a tier man or a committee member has a complaint to make against a prisoner, he brings it to the attention of the Honor Court, which is composed of three "judges," two attorneys for the defense, a prosecuting attorney, a clerk and a court crier. This court meets in the evenings, with no official of the system present to impose its own sentences. The sentence may be 10 days without recreation yard privileges, 20 days without commissary privileges, or 30 days of solitary confinement, according to the seriousness of the complaint. From this court there is no appeal except to the warden, who very rarely interferes with its decisions.

"Why can we trust this inmate court to do the right thing?" asks Mr. Leach. "Because we have gained the confidence of the men and because they appreciate the treatment we give them. They want this system continued, and for that reason they are often harder on offenders than we would be."

No idleness in the prison. Another important element in maintaining discipline is the fact that there is no idleness among the prison body. Every prisoner has work to do, if not in one of the prison departments, in the shops or on the farms. All of the departments, such as the kitchen, the storerooms, the clerical force and the commissary, are under the supervision of an inmate. The evenings are also devoted to salutary activity, the weekly program being as follows: Monday, school; Tuesday, moving pictures; Wednesday, Bible class; Thursday, moving pictures; Friday, school; Saturday, moving pictures; Sunday, church.

The concrete results of the system are enumerated by Mr. Leach in this manner: "The virtual elimination of escapes. During 1919, the last year of the old system, we lost 20 men, despite the heavy force of armed guards. During 1920, the first year of the honor system, we lost 8. In 1921 we lost 5. During the last 13 months we have lost but one."

The relatively easy recapture of those who have escaped. When a man walks away, the entire prison body is on our side, and we always find a 'crony' who is willing to indicate to us where he might be found. Under the old plan the majority of those who escaped were never recaptured.

"Actual reformation of the men in our care. In the average jail or penitentiary, from 40 to 90 per cent of the inmates are 'repeaters,' men who have served previous terms. Our number of 'repeaters' has been cut down to 15 per cent despite the fact that in addition to cases of the penitentiary class we are obliged to accept short-term men for such minor offenses as drunkenness and drug smuggling. The men themselves will not allow it. They know it would undermine and in time do away with the honor system."

All of these facts and statistics are taken from the warden's office records, which are open to any person who is seriously interested in the operation of the plan.

"What we have really done here," concludes Mr. Leach, "has been to apply in an absolutely literal sense the Biblical edict that 'man is his brother's keeper.' These men have no keepers, or guards, other than their own fellow prisoners, and they thrive on it. They are mentally, physically and spiritually. And, not only do they thrive on it, but society thrives on it as well for the simple reason that we are eliminating crime from the thoughts of those who for years have known nothing else."

The Wharf in a Florida Port

The day was perfect, bright and clear, with the faintest of breezes blowing. Straight from the tropics it came, and one fancied its low crooning echoed the roar of the surf on some rock-bound coast and the rustling of tall palms that waved their feather plumes on distant seagirt isles. The wharf was a-bustle with industry. A fishing smack had come in and the fish were being rapidly passed from hold to warehouse; a great steamer had docked during the night, and her cargo of spices filled the air with a strange fragrance; the screech of hoisting tackle was followed by a dull boom and splash as huge mahogany logs were dumped into the water from a French bark, recently arrived from Africa. All nations and all climates blended there in an exotic and picturesque jumble of bright colors, queer costumes, strange tongues and stranger industries. A newsboy boarded ship after ship crying the latest news as portrayed by the headlines on the stack of papers under his arm; skills were bobbing about among the larger vessels. A continuous line of Negroes, glistening with sweat, carried boxes, bales and bags from the hold of the merchantman, and stored them in an adjoining warehouse. On the after deck of the bark a cabin boy was playing with a monkey, and in the foreseeable saw and litter of pigs squealed shrill answers to the creak of cranes and pulleys. All around the seagulls dipped and dived and circled in graceful flight.

COTTON-GROWING EXPERIMENT SUCCESSFUL IN KENTUCKY

Once Flourishing Hemp-Growing Industry Passes—Half-Million Dollar Crop on 30,000 Acres Is Forecast

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 3 (Special Correspondence).—Simultaneously with the passing of the once-flourishing hemp-growing industry in Kentucky, the southwestern section of the State this year conducted an experiment in the growing of cotton which has proved remarkably successful. Thirty thousand acres were put under cultivation and the crop produced thereon is estimated to be worth $500,000.

The passing of the hemp industry and the experiment in cotton were not in any way correlated. Hemp was for more than 100 years grown in the Blue grass and sections of central Kentucky, and these districts never were cotton producers. Before the Civil War practically all of western Tennessee, western Kentucky, southwestern Missouri and southern Illinois grew cotton, but with the advantage of slave labor and a longer growing period, the south soon made it unprofitable for the more northerly territory.

Pulton County, though, in the extreme southwestern tip of Kentucky, whose rich alluvial soil and long growing season have all but disappeared, bottoms gives it a great advantage.

One reason for hemp's abandonment is the effect the crop has on the soil. The main reason, however, is the substitution of sisal from Yucatan and jute from the Philippines. The increasing cost of labor and the scarcity of skilled hands likewise had an effect, for wages went up with the war and the old-time Negro hands who worked with the hemp, from the seceding to the breaking, have all but disappeared. Even with the land and labor problems solved, Kentucky hemp cannot hope to compete with the cheaper substitutes, unless some successful machine breaker can be evolved to replace the tiresome hand method.

Martha the Baker

HOWEVER am I to buy a present for Mother that will really be a present from me, Shep? asked Martha as she walked slowly home from school one afternoon in early December.

Shep looked up and wagged his tail as he trudged along beside her. He seemed to take the business of meeting Martha after school very seriously. Every day he would be waiting for her at the school door when the children filed out and she liked to have him there, he was such a jolly companion.

"With Mother busy all day every day earning money to buy me clothes and things, I'm not going to ask her for money to pay for her own Christmas present. No sir. Not me."

Martha walked on for some distance in silence and Shep wondered what was the matter. He knew something was worrying his little mistress for she usually talked to him all the way home.

When they got to the little gray house far down a side street where Martha lived, they went around the back door and entered the kitchen. The grocery boy had left some things on the back porch, they found. Martha took these indoors with her, and the bag of sugar gave her an idea.

"I wonder," she said, "if I couldn't make some cookies for supper? I've watched Mother often enough and I'm sure I can do just as she does."

was. All afternoon as she worked, a plan had been taking shape in her mind, and now she knew how she could get the present she wanted. The next day she ran all the way home from school, put six of the cookies in a nice little basket, and started out to visit the neighbors and the people who lived in the big house on the corner. At six different houses she handed in a basket and asked if they would like to buy some more just like it. All of them, when they heard her plan, wanted to buy and it was a happy little girl who returned home that night.

Every afternoon she baked and hurried to put the cooking dishes away before Mother should get home. And every day her little pile of nickles and dimes and quarters grew. If Mother missed the flour and sugar and butter she said nothing, and if she was surprised to see a new supply one day that she had not ordered she kept it to herself. But Martha was a good little, business woman and wanted to pay for everything she used for Mother.

It was hard work for a little girl, but she enjoyed doing it all by herself and she enjoyed thinking of the surprise in store for her mother on Christmas morning.

IRRIGATION OF SUDAN OFFERS MATERIAL GAIN TO ALL EGYPT

Expert Cites Province of Sind, With Irrigated Area Larger Than Egypt, Dependent on River Indus, Which First Must Water the Punjab

Special from Monitor Bureau
LONDON, Dec. 8—Does Egypt stand to suffer by the extension of irrigation in the Sudan? This question lies at the root of much criticism that has been launched against the recent decision of the British Government not to hold itself any longer bound to consult Egypt in the matter of the development of the Gezira project in the Sudan.

This project, it may be recalled, is only one of several designed to utilize the upper waters of the Nile for growing cotton and other crops in the Sudan. As at present proposed, it concerns only the comparatively limited area of 300,000 acres, of which possibly one-third may become available for the growth of high-grade cotton. If it succeeds, however, it may be followed by other projects, also in the Sudan, which may affect areas many times as large.

It is these bigger schemes of which Egyptians are chiefly afraid. Their anxiety is based upon the fact that every drop of water essential for the cultivation of their own fields has to pass through the Sudan before it reaches them. They fear they may eventually be deprived of their supply if the Sudan irrigates its own territory without consulting them.

Under these circumstances it becomes important to examine a parallel case which exists in India. ## Stockholm Debates Preservation of Seventeenth Century City

Citizens Object to Royal Marine Razing Djurgardsstaden for Extension of Fleet Station

Stockholm Special Correspondence
THE recent appointment by the State of a committee composed of representatives of the Department of the Royal Swedish Marine and citizens of Stockholm, to decide the fate of Gamla Djurgardsstaden, has brought to the attention of Stockholm the existence of a quaint little seventeenth-century city, quite intact, in the heart of Stockholm. In 1918 an agreement was made between the Swedish Government on behalf of the Department of Marine and the city of Stockholm, in virtue of which the whole ground on which Djurgardsstaden stands was handed over to the State to be used as an extension of the present fleet station of Stockholm. Protests on the part of citizens who value the historic associations of this old spot have delayed the execution of the plan.

Professor Lallerstedt, Miss Anna Lindhagen and Captain Eggert have been chosen to represent the city, and they will present the viewpoint that this tiny community has an inestimable value as a historical museum. Lately its historic worth has been made known by the research work of Erland Heurlin, an architect who intends to publish a book on the cultural history of Djurgardsstaden.

Narrow Streets With Quaint Houses

That within five minutes walk of the center of Stockholm there exists a typical little seventeenth-century city untouched and populated by a small idyllic community is unknown to thousands of people residing in Stockholm. To the Christian Science Monitor's representative it appeared like a historic town built for some great film, whose mission was to present the exact conditions prevailing in the period 1646-1735. Nestling behind the great building of the Tivoli, Stockholm's Coney Island, was the first low, wooden house with its red-tiled roof and wide clapboards. The narrow streets and quaint little houses still stand there as they did almost 200 years ago.

We entered this first house, for the door stood open, as is the custom in the small farming communities all over Sweden. On the unvarnished balustrade, polished by generations of hands, initials and dates were carved. On the landing was a small table of heavy oak and flower boxes laden with flowers. A knock on the door and a neat and cheery woman invited us to enter. Within the sun shone through incredibly small leaded glass windows at which flowers bloomed. On the opposite side was a hearth and stone oven, plastered so that the whole wall slanted out into the room which served as bed and sitting-room. For this room, 125 kronor a year, or about $34, is paid. It is believed the house will soon be moved bodily up to Skansen to form part of that open-air museum. These old homes are still used as residences by the children and grandchildren of the families inhabiting them in 1700, when they were built as workmen's homes for the community that gradually grew up about the busy wharf built by a thrifty business man named Lodsach. This wharf became a flourishing enterprise and its activity lasted 153 years.

Here Sang Bellman
After that time the whole place was bought by the Government and used as a storing place for different materials. There is no gas, electricity, nor water pipes in the houses. Each family must fetch water from the common pump and the nearest approach to modernity is that the large bracket lanterns in the streets are lit by gas. This primitiveness, however, seems to be considered no hardship and seems to be more than compensated for by the privilege of living in these small low-ceilinged ancestral homes, which recall the good old days of Bellman, the much-loved poet, who sang to his lute in "Gröna Lund."

Djurgardsstaden was originally the summer residence of Queen Christina, whose lodge still stands and is one of the more imposing buildings in the little city. It is now an apartment house although nearly 300 years old. In 1646 Queen Christina donated the ground which now bears the name of Djurgardsstaden to the Admiralty for a place to build homes for seamen and other persons attached to the Admiralty. The first houses constructed consisted of 30 cabins brought over in 1668 and 1671 from Aland, (the island in the Bay of Bothnia). They form a row of tiny houses facing the sea, whose front doors are so low that one must stoop to enter them. Following this tiny street one enters an enclosed backyard, better described in the Swedish word "gården," as it was full of old-fashioned flowers. The lilac and rose bushes have trunks as thick as small trees. Everywhere in these hidden backyards, which seemed to open into one another till one could lose one's way as in labyrinth, was perfect cleanliness. Encircling the yards were wash-houses, tool, play, store and summerhouses, as is the custom in the farmyards in Sweden. It now remains to be seen what will be the decision of the committee in regard to this charming miniature, seventeenth-century village, forgotten in the center of the busy Swedish capital.

larger one and, glancing slightly upward, plead in the soft accents of the tropics, "Please give me a penny, mister." If all his entreaties fail, he will scurry away homeward and fetch his little sister, firm in the belief that her baby smile will soften the hardest heart. The penny, when obtained, is usually spent for a mango or for candy or for one of those delectable sweetmeats of which the shops of Havana offer such a variety.

South Australia Makes Great Forward Move for Education

Vocational Centers May Lengthen School Period—Teaching Extended Hundreds of Miles by Package

ADELAIDE, S. Aust., Nov. 17 (Special Correspondence)—The Labor Government has decided to devote an additional £72,000 a year to an amplified curriculum, in a practical effort to keep boys and girls longer at school. This grant is quite apart from an extensive building program.

The difficulty confronting the education authorities in South Australia is that of keeping the children at school after they have passed the seventh grade. The establishment of the central vocational schools will take the boys and girls two grades higher. Experts are being engaged to teach the boys extra studies of engineering, carpentry, elementary agriculture, and woodwork, and the girls will be instructed in millinery, dressmaking and domestic science. The Minister expresses hope that parents will be willing to make some sacrifice so that their children may receive a better education than was possible for the previous generation. One of the finest triumphs of the Education Department has been the instruction of the children far away from metropolitan centers. There is a special department in Adelaide which attends to the lessons of boys and girls in Central Australia, as far north as Darwin in the Northern Territory, east to the Queensland and New South Wales borders, over to Kangaroo Island, and away to the lonely islands off the northern coast of Australia. Once a fortnight, by train, camel, horseback and huggy, go the packets of lessons for these waiting little students.

Mothers Eager for School

When the department was started four years ago it was necessary to seek scholars; today, mothers are writing from all the lonely, isolated places for their kiddies to enroll. The total number taught has reached 1167, and children who previously were unable either to read or write have nothing to learn from those in the city who have attained to the same grade.

The appreciation of natural beauty on the part of these far-away scholars is another striking phase of their development. The gorgeous colors of the birds of the tropics are reproduced with striking fidelity, and so with nearly everything that dwells there. Right from the very heart of the continent came this native answer to one line on the question—

We will serve you as ably as we have served our legion of clients. ## Victoria Fosters Literary Tastes

Test of Popularity Puts "Alice in Wonderland" at Head of Big List

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU
MELBOURNE, Vic., Nov. 17—A campaign has just been successfully concluded in Victoria for the encouragement of a taste for good literature among young people.

The week was set apart for intensive propaganda, when a "Children's Book Week" witnessed keen activity on the part of all who are interested in the world of books. News agents and booksellers throughout the State were encouraged to make a special feature of young people's books, and their advertisements and displays were a noticeable feature in the streets of Melbourne.

The committee in charge of the movement used the funds at its disposal to distribute to small booksellers, particularly in the country towns, copies of books whose popularity it seemed desirable to increase. A feature of the campaign was a public vote to decide the 12 best books for children, conducted by a Melbourne newspaper. "Alice in Wonderland" headed the poll, with a local kiddies' story, "Seven Little Australians," second. Next came "Robinson Crusoe," and then "Little Women."

Perhaps the most startling of the results was the low place accorded to the works of Charles Dickens, which the parents and grandparents of the voters of today might have placed at the head of the list. Young Australia may be growing a little less English in its tastes; it reads hard, and all the harder for the flip given by the recent campaign.

THE Beggars Children of Havana
In entering Havana, Cuba, from the bay front one passes through the narrow, cobble-stoned streets of the older portion of town first, where the traffic is all one way and the slender strip of sidewalk permits the passing of only one pedestrian at a time; where the houses rise sheer from the sidewalk, presenting a continuous many-colored front with iron-barred gratings over the doors and windows. Thrones of boys and girls, clad only in the out-brown livery of the sun, romp in the streets and through the houses. They are quick to spy the stranger and gather eagerly around with outstretched palms, their big brown eyes speaking eloquently the words that come so haltingly to their unaccustomed lips, "One cent, please." Perhaps a small chap of 9 or 10 of thereabouts, will slip his soft little hand confidently into the stranger's stand out in relief against the white walls of the museum and the black shadows of the porticoes. They have a tinge of pink in the setting sun. The blue and green of the lake lies beneath, the inner harbor spreads to the north with the red lighthouse at its mouth, and the white yachts and sail boats at anchor for the night are touched with sunset gold. Still farther north, the white towers and walls of giant skyscrapers rise like the towers and walls of an Arabian Nights city.

Southward, down the hill a little way, the new Stadium is growing, and the thoughts wander back to ancient Rome with its temples and palaces of antiquity, yet the distant blue smoke of the steel mills, miles away, quickly brings back the present. New islands are in the making south and east, new boulevards are building, and presently Museum Hill with its splendid palace of marble will rise white and vast from its setting of lake and grass and shrub and tree.

The Hills of Chicago
CHICAGO is not usually thought of as a city of hills or of even possessing one hill, yet there are certain localities where the elevations above lake level are much higher than the "Chicago Plain," as geologists know the present site of the city.

In that ancient period known as "Toleston Stage" when the "Chicago Plain" was covered with water, 30 or 40 feet higher than the present lake level, Rose Hill and Ridge Avenue were above water. To the southwest arose Blue Island, now occupied by the town of Washington Heights, Beverly Hills, Morgan Park, and Blue Island. East of the ancient Blue Island a small island had appeared known as Stony Island, the lowest of all the present hills, yet from Little Stony Island a good deal of the surrounding country is visible. So much for these hills of antiquity.

The city today has a hill of recent date. As you go covered by the boulevard toward the Field Museum you begin to realize that the great building really stands on a hill, for sights before unseen now appear, and the outlook north and east and south grows every moment.

It is just at sunset of an autumn day, and the vast marble columns

A Woodworker's Workshop on the Borders of New Forest

London
Special Correspondence

A VISIT to Romney Green's workshop in the picturesque old town of Christchurch, on the borders of the New Forest, reminds one that the tradition of English furniture, as supervised if not actually made by the designer from start to finish, has not died out. Here in the spacious workshop, with its bow windows giving directly on the Street, Mr. Green, with the help of his assistants and apprentices, is making some of the best furniture of today.

While Mr. Green is well known to the exhibition public as a woodworker, the variety and extent of his achievement can be realized only by a visit to the actual place of work. Almost every piece made is designed to suit the customer's requirements. At present the workshop is fragrant with mahogany, for the workers are executing in this wood an order for the complete furnishing of a dining-room, including a serving-table designed to fit a particular recess; a bigish cupboard, and a table to seat a dozen people. In the case of a drawer-table the greatest attention is given to the seasoning of the wood. It is first cut roughly and planed up; then the width is measured very carefully and the wood placed in a rack in the kitchen. After a month it is examined to see if it has shrunk or warped. If warped it is planed flat again and put back for another month until it is completely dried.

An order for oak furniture at Charterhouse is now proceeding, in the form of a big bookcase and refectory table. Mr. Green's methods are peculiarly in accordance with the character of such dignified old buildings.

A Variety of Woods

Another interesting order is a walnut roll-top writing-table which is being made after the manner of the old Dutch desks; that is, the pigeon-holes come forward with the desk when the roll top opens, and the roll itself goes back into the space vacated by the pigeon-holes. In this case the roll is of solid paneled wood.

In contrast with such solid craftsmanship we turn to elegant candlesticks shaped in mahogany and overlaid with mother-of-pearl, with a frame of ebony. Ebony itself is a favorite wood for mirrors, inkpots and small boxes; for mother-of-pearl work, however, mahogany is always used as the basis, although such wood as shows is ebony or walnut. Mr. Green tells us that he obtains the shell in flat pieces an inch or so square. After they have been ground flat on a grindstone, he cuts them with a hacksaw, shapes them on an emery wheel and then glues them to the wood. His fresh-sawn planks of oak and walnut come from the New Forest; chestnut he obtains from Gloucester. His list of woods is widely varied.

Another branch of his craft in which he takes particular interest is boat building. For a sailing boat just finished, 16 feet long, many woods were needed. When one says that the planking was of cypress and elm, the ribs of ash, the keel, gunwales and stem-post of oak, the transoms of mahogany, one has given only the beginning of the list. Boats again are made to the customer's requirements. It is scarcely necessary to say that Romney Green is a devoted yachtsman.

Secrets of Craftsmanship

Before we left his shop we paused to notice a particularly beautiful armchair. The supports of the arms went through the seat to the lower rails, and the middle part of the back also pierced the seat and joined the bottom rail, affording beautiful and novel lines as well as extra strength. In answer to a question regarding this unusual construction, Mr. Green told us that strength and appearance had been equally considered. "A rule in good construction," he said, "is never to put anything into your design without more than one good reason; that means that everything must be thoroughly thought out."

Then he added: "The secret of good workmanship is to be producing, rather than selling and to remember the nature of the material all the time you are designing."

Failure to do this is the reason why architects so often are poor in furniture design. It should be remembered, too, that nearly all constructional work must be on a geometrical or mathematical basis.

Mr. Green uses both carving and marquetry in his work. Some exquisite small mirrors are framed in narrow walnut with a simple beading of ebony and chestnut along each side. Another mirror has an elaborate frame and folding doors over it of an ivy-leaf pattern; this is inlaid in mahogany, ebony and walnut. Many of the cupboards, desks, and chairs are enriched with judicious bands and moldings of simple "chip" carving, while several boxes and chests are planned almost as pieces of sculpture, the carving being an integral part of the constructional design.

It is unusual to find a craftsman whose work is so varied and covers such a wide field as is indicated by the objects observed in this workshop. They included a memorial to a yacht club, a set of drawers, chests, chairs, candlesticks, boxes and a lectern.

Mr. Green, Woodworker in the New Forest, England, Perpetuates the Old Tradition by Supervising Every Piece Which is Made in His Workshop. This Chest, Designed by Him, is Made of Oak and is Paneled With Pollard Oak. The Hinges Are of Wood.

Carved Boxes Designed by Romney Green. His Favorite Woods for Such Small Objects Are Ebony and Walnut.

Be Modern Like Priscilla

WHEN the hand loom is moved into the home nowadays the innovation compares with those of certain other periods when the sewing machine or the piano was welcomed. Even the electrical apparatus for the lighting of the housework, the washing machine, the vacuum cleaner, the mangle, or the dishwasher, can scarcely claim the distinction of attracting the attention demanded by the loom. To assist at housework is one thing, but to construct, manufacture, originate, and to enlist interest as the loom does, is quite a different affair.

The hand loom for the home costs about $50, although there is a small one at $25, and also a table loom which is a modest usurper of space in limited surroundings. It is easy to determine the cause of the peace that goes with the work of home weaving, for the work itself is fascinating. The stringing of the loom with the warp, and the blending of color in working out patterns, gives the home woman the thrill of manufacture. To have a gown made from the cloth which she has woven herself presents quite a new angle to apparel.

The resurgence of weaving began about 10 or 12 years ago, and soon after the war it took its place in occupational therapy, even helping the blind back to usefulness. The craft is taught at summer camps for girls. For several years it has afforded occupation in settlement houses. Mrs. Florence Cathart, who is connected with the Union Settlement in New York, is enthusiastic as to the possibilities of weaving as a home industry.

"During my childhood," said Mrs. Cathart, "I recall what enjoyment we had with wool and silk and beads embroidered on perforated cardboard; with the cross-stitch we did on canvas with crewels in beautiful shades; even the spool knitting and its fascinating patterns. Then came the war, giving many women a chance to show our latent domestic talents in knitting sweaters, scarfs and helmets. Now again there is a lull. Not every woman is interested in spending time with needle and thread. So here comes along a loom for manufacturing the goods for a gown, and for the many homespun articles that have a dignity all their own."

A Home-Size Clothes Dryer

The drying of laundry is sometimes more of a problem than the washing. In apartment houses usually it involves long journeys to roof or yard with the burden of a heavy basket.

If there is space in the room where the washing is done for a cabinet six feet two inches high, five feet wide and two feet deep the laundry problem can be diminished by the purchase of a drying closet which may be equipped either for gas or electricity.

The hanging capacity of this contrivance is about 60 lineal feet and the volume of air in it changes from two to two and one-half times every minute. The length of time required for drying varies according to the material from five minutes to half an hour.

Artificial heat in rapid circulation seems to be about as effective in bleaching clothes as sun and breeze.

Sugar or flour sacks of the 10-pound size when opened and hemmed make good kitchen napkins.

To sugar doughnuts pour powdered sugar into a small sack; drop in one doughnut at a time, pinch the sack together and shake rather vigorously.

A convenient rack over the kitchen sink holds a clipped verse or poem which one housewife memorizes while washing the dishes. Another larger rack holds all the good papers the children bring home from school. It is an incentive to greater effort for this honor is given only to the better marks.

One housewife marks her jelly in what she considers a more satisfactory manner than with labels pasted to the outside of the glass. Small labels are prepared in the usual manner with the name of the jelly, and the jar is then heated and poured over the top of the jelly. Here it cools the label is laid on top with perhaps an extra drop of the wax to hold it in place. The wax hardens with the label held firmly, and it is easily read even through the paraffin.

How to Refinish Maple or Oak Floors

IF THE floor is discolored it should first be planed, but if not badly stained or very dirty a good sandpapering will do. Whatever is done to a floor should be with the grain of the wood. If the sandpaper is fastened to the bottom of a heavy block of wood to which a handle is attached, or better still, to the bottom of a weighted polishing brush, this work will be easier. After this process is satisfactorily accomplished the floor should be swept and dusted with a soft cloth. Maple and oak floors often are finished with a colorless filler, white shellac and light-colored wax or pale varnish, a treatment that preserves the natural color of the wood with little change. If desired, a somewhat golden tone can be obtained by using orange shellac or dark varnish.

A stain that is brown and intended for maple or oak flooring is prepared as follows: One and one-quarter glasses, 1 quart turpentine, 1 pint ground raw silica (ground in oil), 2 ounces raw umber (ground in oil), 1/2 pint ground Japan drier, 1 pint turpentine.

Put these in a bottle and shake to mix them well.

If a maple or oak floor is to be water-stained, coat it first with clear water and sandpapering it smooth after it is dry will lessen the tendency of the stain to raise the grain of the wood.

Oil stains will be absorbed more evenly by maple or oak floors if the wood is first coated with a mixture of 3 parts turpentine and 1 part linseed oil and the surface sandpapered smooth after it is dry.

Stains should be applied rather thinly with a clean brush or a sponge with even strokes made parallel to the grain of the wood. With water stains especially, care should be taken not to let the strokes overlap, and the stained surfaces should be wiped at once with a soft cloth. Oil stains should be allowed to set for a few minutes before the surface is wiped. Two coats of light stain give a better effect than one coat of heavy stain. In general, 1 gallon of oil stain will coat about 400 square feet of floor once, depending, of course, on the depth of color desired and the texture of the wood.

After Staining
After a floor is stained, it should be allowed to dry for at least 24 hours, and dust kept from it as much as possible. When thoroughly dry, it should be polished with a weighted brush covered with carpet, after which it is ready for the filler and wax or varnish.

Oak needs a good paste filler rubbed in before varnish, wax or shellac is applied, but maple, pine and other nonporous woods do not.

Beat butter and sugar to a cream; add eggs one by one alternately with flour, then milk mixed with treacle, then fruit. Put into a good-sized cake tin and bake in a very slow oven for seven hours. It can be made also into two cakes, and baked for 3 1/2 hours. Grease the inside of a cake tin, and line it neatly with the paste, reserving a piece the size of the top of the bun. Now put together in a large basin the following ingredients:
One pound flour, 1/4 pound sugar, 2 pounds large raisins, stoned, 2 pounds currants, washed, 1/2 pound orange peel, 1/2 teaspoonful black pepper, 1/2 teaspoonful Jamaica pepper, 1 teaspoonful carbonate of soda, 1/2 ounce ginger, 1/2 ounce cinnamon, 1 teaspoonful cream of tartar, 1/4 pound almonds.

THE HOME FORUM

"Prue and I," and the Gentle Commuter

WHAT a delightful companion it is for the first heart fire of the season! It is pleasant, too, knowing that I am not alone in my esteem. The thin little volume, which I had not seen for years, has not left the shelves of the public library since December last, nor has it ever been abroad in a warmer season except once. That, I needs must say, was the night of the early snow, when all good commuters returned home to their gardens, one maintaining the rest because of this very volume in his pocket beside a basket of late cabbage seed.

I can see you, gentle commuter, you covered your tomato plants (they were in bloom and setting fruit) pure jade with haste, did you not? You quite forgot to clean the mud from your boots at the sight of the cheery fire your own Prue had lighted. You settled in your arm chair, opened the book with a sigh. Yes, I am sure you did. It was so pleasant meeting the old bookkeeper again (of course, you had read it before in the proper season). He was a favorite of yours, that old bookkeeper, who wears a white cravat and black trousers in the morning, who rarely goes to the office, and never dines out, is clearly a person of no fashion and of no superior sources of information.

And as you read of him whose only journey was from his house to his office, whose only satisfaction in doing his duty, whose only happiness in his Prue and his children, you mimicked words that your Prue did not catch. The words were, "Ella! Another Ella!" For it came upon you suddenly like that, though you must have been half aware of it for years. Here was a counterpart, a transatlantic shadow, as it were, of that other bookkeeping friend of yours, of small figure, in suit of black cloth, rusty silk hose, much too large thick shoes, whose peregrination from house to office (this in Leadenhall and "de as Erebus") was the chief-own of his career.

ing around the desk on errands of mercy and kindness to them between additions and voyages to Spanish estates.

It was all these and more. This became more obvious as you read. The wealth of literary allusion and quotation was Lamplike—very; from George Herbert's "Sweet day so cool, so calm, so bright," on the first page to his, "I made a poem, while the day ran by" on the last. That laurel leaf for Gray, the one for Coleridge, for Tennyson, Thompson, Hood, and George Wither you liked immensely, and Shakespeare was common in for half the chapter headings, and Milton's Hymn of the Nativity every Christmas Eve.

You noted with some pride that your essayist was not confined to the realm of wondrous (as it is) his mother tongue. Now was he boasting: "I am a tutor of Vittoria Colonna; I walk with Tasso along the terrace garden of the Villa d'Este, and look to see Beatrice smiling down the rich gloom of the cypress shade. You stayed with him at the Hotel Europa in Venice, at Daniell's, or the Leone Bianco; I am the guest of Martino Palech and I whisper to his wife as we climb the giant staircase in the summer moonlight."

"Ah, senza amare Andare sul mare. God spose del mare, Non può consolare."

Yes, that was little bookkeeper! Then you read of him whose only journey was from his house to his office, whose only satisfaction in doing his duty, whose only happiness in his Prue and his children, you mimicked words that your Prue did not catch. The words were, "Ella! Another Ella!" For it came upon you suddenly like that, though you must have been half aware of it for years.

And there you were at that most tedious of essays, Tibbott's Spectacles. There was hardly time for it. You closed (the thin little volume reluctantly. The next night there was no frost, no fire, only much thinning of beads, and marking of corn rows, during which you wondered why the spectacle theme had not been borrowed more frequently. David Grayson had sold some wonderful spectacles though not quite like Tibbott's.

And that was all. What with the strawberries to be picked and the cherries covered from the robins and thrushes, there was no more reading that month. The book was returned unfinished. But you can read about Tibbott's Spectacles yet, gentle commuter, for I am now returning the book.

Ballad of the Wayside Pool

At dawn there came with kisses light
A little wind a-wing,
To blow away the spell of night
And play upon its softest string:
The morning lark awoke to sing,
With all its glad heart calling,
And fragrant was the breath of spring.

With rosy petals falling,
The sun's eye yet began its flight,
As though to magic bring,
Called forth a million sparkles bright.

Amazing radiance to fling
And burnish every humble thing
My watching waters walk,
And mine the splendor of a king—
With rosy petals falling.

The sportive clouds with fond delight
I caught within my ring—
My rugged basin paved with white,
Of pebbles where the lilies cling—
My mossy brim where bluebells swing.

The dusts of entrancing
And sweet was Maytime's lingering,
With rosy petals falling—
Through muffled months remember—
I shall, with joy recalling,
Behold this day, spite winter's sting,
With rosy petals falling.

Maude DeVere Newton.

St. Mark's Piazza

Hushed is the music, hushed the hum of voices.
From coigne and cornice and fantastic gargoyles
At intervals the moan of doves or pigeon.
Fairly faint, floats off into the moonlight.
This, and the murmur of the Adriatic,
Lazily restless, lapping the mossed marble.
Staircase or buttress, scarcely break the stillness.
Deeper each moment seems to grow the silence,
Denser the moonlight in the still Piazza.
Hark! on the Tower above the ancient gateway.
The twin bronze Vulcans, with their ponderous hammers,
Hammer the midnight on their brazen bell there!

—Aldrich.

Remembrance in Art

In fact, the whole ground has shifted under our feet during the last ten years; and unless we realize that a revision of values is necessary, with some attention to the changes in the meaning of our former literary labels, there will be nothing but chaos in literary criticism for the next few years. We want all the new ideas, and especially all the new achievements, that the new age can give us; but one can hardly be regarded as a reactionary, even by the Spectator, if one asserts that our great new cities will not be built any the more quickly if we devote our energies to the destruction of Westminster Abbey. It has become the fashion to estimate a man's power in art and literature by his ability to suggest the utter futility of human effort and the ultimate meaninglessness of the universe. There is, of course, a shallow optimism; but I do not know that it is any more common than a shallow pessimism. I do not know that it is any easier to be optimistic at the present day than to be pessimistic. Those who take the view that, ultimately, nothing matters, are of little value in any department. . . . and certainly they cannot produce the greatest art. If the universe is meaningless, so must be the art produced by it. There is a profound pessimism in the Book of Ecclesiastes, but the greatest work of that Book is not in the proclamation that all is vanity, but in the moment when the writer is caught up into the universal harmony, and calls upon youth not to revolt but to remember, and does so in the recurrent rhythms of poetry: "Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken in the cistern." —Aldrich Noyes, in "Some Aspects of Modern Poetry."

Circles

The wind-eating grasses sway
Bright, trail intanglement on the snow;
My thrifty senses feel dismay
That loveliness be wasted so
On paths where, broom in hand, I
To sweep the night-borne drifts
Away.
Each short blade draws a fairy ring.
Tiny, but large enough to hold
Much purity; the tall blades fling
Their interlacing circles bold.
Not Sirius, through the midnight
rolled.
Nor Ursa of the North, could swing
A fairer circle, arc more true,
Than wind-blown grasses delicate.
I pause; brush lightly, hesitate—
Then, smiling, smite; content that fate
Bids housewives round their circles, too!

Grace Stone Coates.

Healing Power of Gratitude

RIGHT thinking persons quickly unite in censuring any manifestation of ingratitude. They realize that any benefactor deserves appreciation because of his good deeds or, at least, because of his good intentions, and that the unthankful recipient of favors has, by his unreadiness to requite good, not only lessened his ability to enjoy what he has received, but also weakened his power to retain the benefits. Indeed, any outstanding instance of ingratitude is so universally condemned that this very fact indicates a common acknowledgment that men ought always to be grateful. Just how far each one will carry this admission into his own heart, however, endeavoring to correct whatever he may there find of little hidden ways of ingratitude, is quite another problem.

Society, in general, has done much in exacting at least the appearance of appreciation of courtesies and kindnesses; and the persistence of this demand hints the great underlying truth upon which gratitude is based, even though this quality and its origin may not be distinctly understood. Genuine gratitude, however, is an inner flame that glows in the midst of difficulties, as well as in happier moments. It is the light which leads thought to the source whence good is derived. And the understanding of the origin of all good, in turn, inspires true thanksgiving. The one cannot exist without the other. It is therefore undoubtedly because of this fact that men often betray into a sense of ingratitude; for, looking to other mortals and to materiality for good, they open the door to all manner of disappointments and opposing personal emotions.

To cultivate the lovely and healing grace of gratitude, then, one must begin by acknowledging that, as the Apostle James declared, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of light, with whom no variableness, neither shadow of turning." This beautiful and natural recognition that God is the source of all possible good, includes also the perception that since God is Spirit, or Mind, all that He bestows must be wholly spiritual. That which God gives to His children partakes, necessarily, of the divine nature; and the individual who perceives this truth, and accepts in gladness of heart what God gives to him, begins himself to reflect the divine nature. He requites divine Love for constant benefactions in the only way possible to him, by showing through his thankfulness that he understands and desires to conform to spiritual good.

Because God's bestowals are always spiritual, mortal sense cannot appreciate them. It even believes that God sometimes sends trials and afflictions! But divine Love is always tenderly supporting that which is like Love. The sooner one recognizes this fact and begins to forsake false be-prospects where a misty lower brightness that was the sea invaded a far vaguer plan enclosed by mountains, there were dark islands in the sea. We passed through forests to the shrilling of cicadas. When we rose to the coolness of the plateau of Tondano the villages suggested that they had been founded to escape the wonder of strangers. The houses were in the style of the Malay but, but were larger and were built of solid timber on stone foundations. There was evidence everywhere that the people were of a different race. Along the ledge of every veranda were porcelain flower-pots—not vile petal tins, as everywhere else in the East, which make even orchids look like moulting birds of paradise in their cages. Roses, dahlias, sunflowers, and crocuses with colored and variegated foliage were neatly displayed under the plantations of areca and sugar palms, and the plantations. The cattle resembled the deer-like creatures of the Channel Islands at home. The plain about the great lake was planted with rice and maize.

In one hamlet, where the Protestant church, with its steeple and its spirit of placid content and irrevocable decision, the crown nippers were just coming out of school. No procession of young virgins taking the Hampstead air under the eye of a mistress who would stand by the side of a prince improved on the sedate superiority of those girls of Minahasa, bareheaded, bare-footed. In white muslin, with prodigious plaited tails of black hair tied with black bows. They carried books in their hands, and they seemed well aware that they were of the best people, and must walk home in just that way. They did not look at us, but talked to each other discreetly, and my own feeling certainly was that I belonged to a cheaper suburb.

My Dutch companion noticed my astonishment, and chuckled. I learned that so more than a century ago this part of Celebes was inhabited by savages who lived in village communities placed higher on stilts than a usual, for they desired to have a chance, if surprised by head-hunters—H. M. Tomlinson, in "Tidemarks."

Writers

In a pretty large experience I have not found the men who write books superior in wit or learning to those who don't write at all. In regard of more information, nonwriters must often be superior to writers. You don't expect a lawyer in full practice to be conversant with all kinds of literature; he is too busy with his law; and so a writer is commonly too busy with his own books to be able to bestow attention on the works of other people.—Thackeray.

Minahasa

The rest of Celebes may be waiting for its explorers, yet soon it was clear that Minahasa is not only coming even in Indonesia, but that it would be remarkable among earth's showiest attractions. Our car mounted, was besieged by flamboyant foliage, was released to vast

On the Island of Tahiti

Tahiti, Fairest Isle of the Sea

THE Island of Tahiti, in geographical outline, assumes a shape peculiarly like that of a hand mirror; and far down on the little peninsula which forms the handle Capt. James Cook, with the British astronomical expedition, first landed in May, 1769. On the maps and charts the exact place is known today as the "Bale de Tautira, or Mouillage de Cook." Cook's two small vessels anchored here in a beautiful little inlet reached through a natural gateway in the barrier reef which shields all Tahiti from the ceaseless surge of the mighty Pacific; and it was from the hills above the Bay of Tautira that the great explorer gazed upon a scene which he held to be the fairest in all the world. A scene which brought from him his chronicled expression of regret that he was unable to submit such a lovely aspect to the gaze of all men.

I stood a few days ago on the hills above the prettily named bay, as near to the spot described by Captain Cook as I could find, and I felt, somewhat as he did, that longed to share with others one's joy at beholding transcendent natural beauty. Around the tip harbor of Tautira the green-clad hills rise loftily and precipitously, somewhat as about that fair little inlet of Lake Tahoe, known as Emerald Bay. Yet here the verdure is heavier, the green more vivid and the flowers more redolent. On either hand, two slender points stretch like long fingers into the Pacific, the cocoa palms fringing them to the very tips. There is a snowy line of surf along the gleaming beach which extends in a splendid sweep from point to point. And near at hand, in the quiet shelter of Tautira Point, I can almost fancy that the shallow of the British expedition, many weary months from England by way of Cape Horn, are lying comfortably and happily, the outrigger canoes of the wondering natives paddling about them.

Yet, lovely as is the Bay of Tautira, quaint and primitive and unspoiled as is the little Tahitian village that nestles on its shore, one cannot say that it has not a score of counterparts along the one hundred and fifty miles of sea coast of this fairest isle of the sea. For there are Paopao, and Mahalea, and Teaiti, and Maheia, and Otua, and Vanaita; and it seems as if no language or dialect the world over could provide for them such sweetly euphonious, such colorful and softly suggestive names as these of the singing Tahitian tongue. The ending "iti" means "little" in Tahitian, as "iki" in the Hawaiian dialect of the Polynesian language. There is no "iki" in Tahitian, nor is there a "iti" in Hawaiian. The dialects are distinctive. The adjective "little" in Tahitian usually, however, conveys the implication of tenderness or beauty of vague charm, somewhat as in the French.

A leisurely trip around Tahiti reveals one beautiful scene after another until the impression of unreality, the dreamlike nature of it all, which so appealed to Stoddard and Stevenson and Gauguin and La Farge, is deepened even in the fancy of the least imaginative. Tahiti defies anyone to see it and know it and remain untouched with its lure and its rarity and its colorful charm, or to leave without a conviction of that beauty which is so far beyond the grasp of the spoken or written word, or even of the master's brush. "The world holds only one Tahiti," proclaimed Bougainville a century and a half ago, and a thousand artists and writers and travelers and wanderers have echoed that pronouncement. Even today this fairest isle of the sea is so little altered that it fulfills in every way one's keenest anticipations.

Nocturne

Written for The Christian Science Monitor
Black night looks down through the eyes of a million stars;
The elm trees stand on the shore
To the tune of the reeds in the water.
A lonely night-bird whirs swiftly
Down the cold breeze of the lake;
And the patter of wild things, scurrying
To the tune of the reeds in the water.

Jane Dickinson.

"Cordial Flowers"

"The ancients had four cordial flowers for cheering the human spirit: rose, violet, alkanet, and the blue flowering borage." It is an arbitrary selection. There are more than any four cordial flowers. We have all experiences of the cordial ministering of flowers, quite outside that list. Cordial flowers bloom in every field and hedgerow. They are found in every season. Any flower that cheers in a day of need may claim the name; it properly belongs to that ancient and noble order. That it has been the messenger of light and hope to one soul is an all-sufficing patent of nobility.

The trailing arbutus that greeted the Pilgrim Fathers as they stepped ashore in New England, on their memorable and heroic quest, was a flower of that order. It gave the strange land a homelier air. Though a new flower to them, there was no mistaking its welcome and its radiant cheer. It proved one of God's kindly ministers to those buffeted men and women. It has been a sacred emblem ever since. There is no more beloved flower in the United States of America than the little trailing arbutus. That land has not forgotten, nor is ever likely to forget, that cordial minister to a handful of newcomers three centuries ago. They became known, and so did the flower.

Such ministry is not unusual. It is a perennial work. Occasionally it gets into print and even into history, but for the most part, like human deeds of the same sort, it goes unrecorded. Yet could we not all bear our testimony? There have been days when we found cordial flowers that did great things for us. I cherish the vision of an English lane framed in grass and the little yellow celandine.

Целебная Сила Благодарности

Перевод с Английского помещенной на этой странице статьи Христианской Науки.

ПРАВИЛЬНО мыслящие люди быстро объединяются в общество. Они понимают, что каждый из нас должен заслужить признательности за свои добрые дела или, по крайней мере, за свои добрые намерения, и что неблагодарность портит милость, своей неотвратимостью отбрасывая за добро, не только уменьшает свою способность воспользоваться тем, что он получил, но также ослабляет свою силу даровать дары. Действительно, каждый из нас должен заслужить признательности за свои добрые дела или, по крайней мере, за свои добрые намерения, и что неблагодарность портит милость, своей неотвратимостью отбрасывая за добро, не только уменьшает свою способность воспользоваться тем, что он получил, но также ослабляет свою силу даровать дары.

Человек, который не умеет благодарить, не может быть счастливым. Он должен научиться благодарить, и тогда он будет счастливым. Он должен научиться благодарить, и тогда он будет счастливым.

RADIO

Transatlantic Radiocasts of Photographs Described

Changing of Light Rays Into Radio Impulses, and Transmission, Outlined by Capt. Ranger

One of the most interesting recent feats of radio was the transmission of pictures across the Atlantic by the Radio Corporation of America, the device employed being the result of development work by Capt. Richard H. Ranger, of the research department of this concern.

The writer has the privilege last spring to inspect the work that Captain Ranger was then doing on this apparatus and the witnessing of such an epoch-making device in operation was unusually interesting. We were ushered up to a small room that would lead the average person to think it was merely an office in the building of the Radio Corporation at 66 Broad Street, New York.

A strange maze of radio devices confronted us. We were promptly introduced to a quiet, unassuming chap, tall and slender, who hesitatingly accepted our entrance until we were vouchered for by our escort.

Then, exhibiting a big, boyish grin that quickly repudiates the stern pictures of him that have been printed in the newspapers since it was announced that Captain Ranger was responsible for this work.

Once a Monitor Correspondent

The conversation drifted first to newspapers and he shyly confessed that he had once been a correspondent on The Christian Science Monitor.

Quite surprised, we asked him how, where, and when. He then explained that when a student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology that he used to set as the college correspondent for the Monitor. And talking with him one feels that he is more the college boy keenly alert after a track victory than the dry, uninteresting natural scientist that the average person often pictures a technical man of this type.

The idea used in transmitting these pictures was given to us as follows: That electric impulses in the form of radio waves are varied at the transmitting end by a powerful light shining through a negative which is moved sideways and rotated so that it, in effect, cuts the picture up into a series of fine slices.

The dark and light shading in the negative then causes a change in the electric current. This current with its variations or modulations as they are called in radio, is sent across any given distance until it is picked up by a receiving station with the special equipment necessary to translate the modulations back into a picture.

Vibrating Pen Draws

The novel method used in this instance, however, causes a rapidly vibrating pen point to travel across the paper with the same slice effect previously mentioned so that a pen and ink drawing is the result, with the waving line effect.

After discussing this new development in his smiling, guarded way, Captain Ranger showed us a novel thing. On one table sat the transmitting instruments. On another table six feet away rested the receiving pen and ink device. A negative was put on the transmitter which started to send it out. This was sent to a point in New Jersey by land wire where it was radiocast, picked up at the great station at Riverhead, L. I., and transferred from this point by land line back to the office we were in where it was reproduced on the receiving machine.

Thus we were able to see the picture being sent and the same picture being received by merely turning our attention from one table to another one six feet away.

The synchronization was perfect and absolutely no lag was perceptible. The entire effect right before one's eyes was more than inspiring. Congratulations were naturally in order and Captain Ranger's reply was typical of all real radio men we have met. "Well, we are working on it and hope to get it going just the way we want it to. It's a lot of fun at that," and his twinkling eyes smiled at us cheerily as we started to go.

Photoradiogram System

A more technical description of the device follows:

For the actual operation of the transmitter, the picture, printed matter or whatever is to be sent, is first photographed on an ordinary camera film. This is developed and then placed on a glass cylinder, being held firmly in place by metal clips. The picture is now ready to be transmitted.

Inside this glass cylinder is an incandescent lamp, the light from which is focused in a minute beam on the film as the cylinder is set in motion. As the light and dark portions of the picture are transmitted by the light beam, the intensity of the ray is changed. This ever-changing beam, after having passed through the film, is again focused through another lens outside the cylinder onto the sensitive element of a photo-electric cell, a recent development of the General Electric Company which transforms the light waves into electrical impulses or waves, which can be transmitted by radio much the same as a regular dash and dot message.

This photoelectric cell is commonly spoken of in the laboratory as the "eye" of the transmitter. The electrical resistance of this cell changes in accordance with the amount of light which falls upon it, and in this way takes care of the shading of the picture in transmission.

Photoelectric Cell

The photoelectric cell functions practically without any lost motion. That is, the instant the slightest change in the amount of light reaches the cell, a corresponding change in the output current of the cell takes place. In this way the "eye" of the transmitter is able to "see" even the tiniest light variations, in fact the "eye" sees and records electrically millions of different current impulses as the film sweeps by the light beam from inside the cylinder.

The photoelectric cell is, therefore, responsible for reproducing a seemingly infinite number of different electric current impulses which correspond with the light and dark areas of the picture being transmitted.

In order to cover all of the original film, the glass cylinder is rotated back and forth and in this way the entire surface is eventually exposed to the piercing light beam. The film rotates through an angle equal to the width of the picture and the electric camera itself advances down the length of the picture one notch at a time. Thus, line upon line, the whole picture is covered.

After the signal impulses or electric waves from the photoelectric cell pass through a series of vacuum tube amplifiers, they are fed into a modulating device ready for transmission. The electrical interpretation of the picture is then transmitted over land wires from the London laboratory to the Carnarvon, Wales, high-power transmitting station of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company, Ltd.

Ether Waves Motivated

Here the electric impulses on the land wire operate small relays which turn on and off the high value currents flowing from the 200 kilowatt generator to the antenna system.

This high-power electrical energy leaving the antenna in interrupted impulses, similar to dots and dashes of the telegraph code, motivates the ether waves which carry the photograph through space 3000 miles to the receiving station on this side of the Atlantic, located at Riverhead, Long Island.

The development of the Photoradiogram transmitter has purposely been carried on in connection with the established radio transmitting stations, now engaged in sending radiograms daily between London and America. Thus the new device does not require the preparation of any special radio circuits for efficient operation.

At Riverhead, Long Island, in the Radio Corporation's central receiving station, the operator tunes in to the Carnarvon station. His receiver picks up the picture just the same as he would a radiogram but instead of dots and dashes which he can read he receives an undeciphered series of impulses. These pass through a bank of vacuum tube amplifiers and are then sent by land wire to the laboratory of the Radio Corporation located in the building in Broad Street.

Operation of "Unscrambler"

Here this unintelligible code, carrying the photograph, is translated back into black and white, recording the original picture much in the style of a stippled engraving.

The so-called "unscrambler" in the RCA Laboratory (the final operation involved between transmitter and receiver) decodes or unscrambles each individual electrical pulse of energy a definite task to perform in reassembling the picture.

The picture is reproduced in duplicate at the receiver, both on a paper record and on a photographic film. The paper upon which the record is made is wrapped around a rotating cylinder, which, in size and appearance much resembles the early type of wax phonograph record. A specially constructed fountain pen bears against this just as the needle of the Phonograph does on a record.

The pen is attached to an electrically-controlled lever in such a way that every pulse of electrical current which passes through the magnet coils of the relay lever draws the pen to the surface of the paper, making a fine ink mark. A changing current fed through the magnet coils causes the pen to wiggle in step with the current impulses, thus giving the artistic stippling effect in the reproduced picture.

Synchronization Necessary

One of the outstanding requirements in sending pictures by radio or wire is absolute synchronization of the sending apparatus with the receiving device, otherwise distortion will occur. If the receiving apparatus should lag the slightest particle of time behind the transmitting set, the received picture would be blurred and unrecognizable.

This necessary synchronization is maintained by the use of special driving motors, one geared to the transmitting cylinder and the other geared to the receiving cylinder.

These motors, although separated by 3000 miles, maintain the same speed. To check against any change which might occur, special controlling mechanism is attached to the receiver, based upon the constant pitch of the tuning fork.

The making of the ink record is visible in all its details. The wiggling of the fountain pen can be watched as the cylinder rotates back and forth, gradually building up the picture. The photographic record is made on an ordinary camera film inside a specially constructed camera. A beam of light plays upon the paper. This is developed as any film and as many prints can be made from it as desired.

The radio industry is running away beyond all estimates and expectations," according to Maj. Herbert H. Frost, president of the Radio Manufacturers' Association. "The manufacturers who have been longest in the field had prepared for a record-breaking season, but the season started earlier than was anticipated and few manufacturers are now able to keep their production up to their orders." Major Frost adds:

There are many good reasons for this tremendous volume of business. Radio apparatus is better than it ever was. More persons are discovering that it does not require a college course in electrical engineering to make it possible to build their own radio receiving sets. Radio-casting has improved, both in program and in the mechanical apparatus used in the stations.

The most satisfactory feature of this increase in business is that it does not look for the usual drop next autumn. By that time the new higher power stations, authorized at the recent radio conference called in Washington by Secretary Hoover, will be in operation. These high-power stations it will be possible to cut through the atmospheric disturbances which have tended to hamper summer reception.

Also, these high-power stations will make it possible for the farmer to receive his market and weather reports during the daylight hours. Heretofore such reception has been extremely difficult, and this condition kept the farmer from buying radio. At the present probably no

Head of Manufacturers' Association Declares That Few Plants Are Able to Keep Production Up to Orders—Big Trade Laid to Prospect of High-Power Stations

NEW YORK, Dec. 19 (Special)—The radio industry "is running away beyond all estimates and expectations," according to Maj. Herbert H. Frost, president of the Radio Manufacturers' Association. "The manufacturers who have been longest in the field had prepared for a record-breaking season, but the season started earlier than was anticipated and few manufacturers are now able to keep their production up to their orders." Major Frost adds:

More persons are discovering that it does not require a college course in electrical engineering to make it possible to build their own radio receiving sets. Radio-casting has improved, both in program and in the mechanical apparatus used in the stations.

The most satisfactory feature of this increase in business is that it does not look for the usual drop next autumn. By that time the new higher power stations, authorized at the recent radio conference called in Washington by Secretary Hoover, will be in operation. These high-power stations it will be possible to cut through the atmospheric disturbances which have tended to hamper summer reception.

Also, these high-power stations will make it possible for the farmer to receive his market and weather reports during the daylight hours. Heretofore such reception has been extremely difficult, and this condition kept the farmer from buying radio. At the present probably no more than 15 per cent of all the American and Canadian farmers have receiving sets. The farmers have had a very prosperous year and I look for a large percentage of them to begin buying radio within the next few months.

Thousands of people also have been waiting before buying sets in the belief that there would be revolutionary changes in receiving sets. The best engineers in the industry are of the opinion that there will be no such changes. Development will be gradual and there is no likelihood of a person's buying a good set today and finding it obsolete a few weeks hence.

Radio has ceased to be a fad. It is necessary to many who are remote from the large centers of population. It is the greatest source of communication discovered since the first language was developed. For all these reasons I believe that the radio industry in the United States will run close to $400,000,000 in 1925, quite a sum for an industry which really got started after the World War.

Both father and son are licensed amateurs using respectively the calls W8EJ and SDGS. The younger Johnson declared that the daily chats had never been missed so far. Other members of the family use the microphone and letter writing is a thing of the past. Report and station cards show that the range of these stations is from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic Ocean.

A log of atmospheric conditions indicates that reception is best during rain storms, or when the atmosphere is calm and the ionosphere is active. Both stations are well known radio-cast listeners and to the four members of the American Radio Relay League. They have given effective service in emergencies. When wire communication was interrupted, the receiving equipment at SDGS consists of three separate sets. One is homemade and was built by Mr. Johnson around a low-loss coupled transformer. A voice amplifier is also provided with a 218A tube employing about 45 volts on the plate. The Johnson's station is located in a place where there is no alternating current available, so a DC plant furnishes the power.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19 (Special)—An informal report to the Department of Commerce from Germany states that the Telefunken Company, electrical manufacturers of Germany, are objecting to the infringement of their patents by a number of firms manufacturing radio equipment, and the company is conducting vigorous press campaigns against the manufacturers.

These patents are said to cover vacuum tubes, radio amplification, reflex hookups, radio-frequency amplifier with regeneration, detector tubes with regeneration, neodyne sets, loop aerials, and other equipment.

At a recent special committee meeting to discuss legislation it was the opinion of many that no bill would be passed during the short session of Congress. However, further consideration has been given to the matter, and it is possible that a statement will be made by the committee at a later date, which, of course, will be merely advisory as the committee has no other power.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19 (Special)—An interpretation of the recent decision of Harlan F. Stone, Attorney General, in connection with the granting of licenses for German-owned radio patents held by the Navy Department has just been rendered by the Judge Advocate-General of the navy.

It is held that the Navy Department can receive cash for these licenses as well as accept radio patents held by radio manufacturers in whole or part payment for licenses which the Navy Department may issue to them. The working plan for the granting of these licenses has not been completed.

MANILA, Dec. 19 (AP)—The Radio Corporation of America expects to build a radio "superstation" in the Philippines. Rear Admiral W. H. G. Bullard, retired, an official of the Federal Telegraph Company of Delaware, which is a subsidiary of the Radio Corporation of America, declared here yesterday.

BRITISH STAND FIRM ON INDIAN LAWLESSNESS

Progressive Restriction of the Opium Trade Is Anticipated

Special from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, Dec. 8.—The new British Government is going cautiously to work in connection with the situation in India.

In an informal talk with a representative of The Christian Science Monitor on this subject, Lord Birkenhead, Secretary of State for that department, said, regarding the opium situation, that India, alone of all countries producing this drug, has adopted a definite policy of restricting exports to the legitimate needs of importing countries as certified by their governments.

Asked what developments might be expected in connection with the Indian demand for autonomy, Lord Birkenhead said the scheme already in operation, which gave large additional powers of self-government, so as to prepare the way in this direction, must be fully tried out. It was clearly laid down when this scheme was introduced, that progress should be by stages of which the first should last 10 years.

Revision in 1929
Revision would not be due until 1929, and the policy of the Government of India Act, which held the field, did not contemplate any further advance at an earlier date. The nature of the scheme made the opportunity of constitutional development which the scheme affords might determine the direction as well as the extent of developments to take place when the time for revision arrived.

If in the interval the best was made of the opportunities offered by the scheme as it now stands, then those who asked for further advance toward autonomy would have a powerful argument wherewith to support their claim. This argument would not be available to them, however, if the opportunity now afforded was used merely to obstruct government or to render the scheme itself unworkable.

Free Discussion Invited
The wine of self-government, Lord Birkenhead added, "is ready for those who lack parliamentary experience. A great deal of ill will, however, he thought might be dispelled by free discussion of the public affairs in the legislatures."

The revolutionary element, though unquestionably present in India, was in numbers contemptible and he hoped the ordinance promulgated when the late Government was in office, had made it clear that there would be no hesitation in dealing promptly with all known anarchical conspirators and their plots.

The liberal economic and fiscal policy of the British Government toward India remained unchanged. The problem of how to ameliorate the conditions of the lives of the cultivators, who constitute the overwhelming majority of the inhabitants, was under continuous investigation. And results, though often individually small, tended to be cumulative.

The claims of European officials in India for improvement in conditions of service to meet post-war conditions would be dealt with within the minimum of delay, upon the lines recommended by the recent commission under Lord Lee.

British Designer Applying "Rotor" Methods to Airplanes

Success Might Lead to Safeguarding of Air Lines, Rendering Them as Dependable as Railways

By MAJ. C. C. TURNER

Special from Monitor Bureau
LONDON, Dec. 8.—Aerodynamicists are busy with the theory of Herr Anton Flettner's "rotor ship," and one of the best known British airplane designers is confident he has solved the problem of applying the same idea to the airplane. Patent rights are, indeed, being applied for by at least two separate investigators.

The Flettner ship has, in place of the masts and sails of a sailing ship, two towers which are hollow cylinders about 60 feet in height and 10 feet in diameter. By means of a small motor these cylinders rotate, each on its own axis, at great speed, but at speed which can easily be regulated by the operator. Wind blowing on these cylinders sets up in a manner not clearly understood a force having a reaction in a different direction from that of the wind; and this reaction can be utilized to propel the ship in any direction, but in some directions at greater speed than in others. If the masts, or towers, were not rotating, they would, of course, as more air hit obstructions, and would drift the ship only in the direction of the wind.

Air Action on Rotating Cylinder
The strange behavior of air or water flowing on to a rotating cylinder was long ago observed, but has never been explained. The orthodox line of aerodynamic research in the service of aviation has entirely neglected it, and the experts point out that high-lift wing sections, low-resistance wings, slotted wings, variable camber or area wings, although helpful, afford but small improvement when the price—in extra mechanism or weight—has been paid. If now a discovery puts an entirely new aspect to the matter and greatly increases the lift of a machine, aviation will be immediately established, for this would enable those improvements and safeguards to be adopted which would make air lines as regular and certain as the railways.

The crude first idea of the rotor applied to the airplane is that of horizontal cylinders in place of the usual wings, these cylinders projecting right and left from the body, and each rotating on its axis, direction to the machine being given by the

Antonin Svehla, One of Trio at Helm of Czechoslovakia

Prime Minister Who Formed Petka Began Political Career in Administration of Native Commune

PRAGUE, Dec. 1 (Special Correspondence).—Antonin Svehla has recently completed two years in office as Prime Minister of the Czechoslovak Republic. Outside of his own country his name is probably little known, seldom mentioned among

ANTONIN SVEHLA
Czechoslovak Prime Minister, Trusted
By All Parties in the Republic.

circles to whom the names of Thomas G. Masaryk and of Eduard Benes are familiar.

Nevertheless, within Czechoslovakia, Svehla is very popular. He has few enemies, and from all corners of the provinces and from newspapers of widely different views tributes have poured in to this steady leader of the democracy. Svehla has played his part within the frontiers as staunchly as Benes has played his in foreign lands, and Masaryk remains the directing genius behind them both. While Masaryk and Benes were working in Paris and in London to prepare the tide of international opinion in favor of the formation of the republic, Svehla was laying the ground for the "inner revolution" within the borders of Bohemia and Moravia and Slovakia. This was during the war. The trio were even then at the helm.

In Charge of Home Office
It was natural, therefore, that Svehla should occupy responsible offices after their dream of a republic had been realized. Under the first Prime Minister, Dr. Kramar, Svehla was given charge of the Home Office. Dr. Kramar, however, was busy during the early days at the Peace Conference in Paris, and Svehla conducted the affairs of state temporarily. In October, 1922, a political crisis brought a change of government, which resulted in the reelection of Dr. Kramar to the leadership of a parliamentary group and the advancement of Antonin Svehla to the Prime Ministry.

Pan Svehla (Pan being Czechoslovak for "Mr.") with commendable tact and political foresight, formed a coalition group of five principal parties which have come to be termed popularly the "Petka." They form the solid central block, leaving to one side the German and Magyar minorities and to the other the Slovakian Roman Catholic Party under the guidance of the priest, Hlinka.

Composition of Petka
In the coalition are two Socialist parties, one representing "bourgeois" interests, on agricultural and one made up of what might be called the "Roman Catholic conservatives." It is no small tribute to the political sagacity of Pan Svehla that he has been able to weather these two years of parliamentary storms and crises and to have maintained throughout this time the unbroken front of the Petka.

Pan Svehla was a farmer and is still a farmer. He comes of an agricultural family whose fields lie by the village of Hostivar near Prague. He commenced his political career in the administration of his native commune. He succeeded in this work and was elected in 1908 to a seat in the Bohemian Diet, and a year later he was elected to the executive committee of the Czechoslovak Agrarian Party.

In this way he assisted in directing the affairs of the large organization which includes in its network financial enterprises, commercial enterprises and an extensive press. He strengthened his position until the turn of the war brought him forward as the natural leader of the republican forces within the country.

Scottish Burgh
AIDS UNEMPLOYED
Men's Labor Benefits Town
and Leads to Further Work
DUNBAR, Scotland, Dec. 7 (Special Correspondence).—How one small Scottish town has given work to its unemployed, and at the same time enriched the town's finances, was told recently to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor.

Dunbar is an east coast town of about 4000 inhabitants, famous for its rugged coast scenery. Like all other burghs, large and small, it felt the pinch of unemployment. Three winters ago the town council, after a long and arduous struggle, decided to take the unemployed who were on the rates. This work was only part time, owing to the tides, but the men earned at least as much as they were getting from unemployment insurance and from the Parish Council. It was felt that they were the better and the town the richer by their work.

The project had always been a fine one, owing to its position, but it was so deepened and improved that for the last two seasons people have been visiting Dunbar from all over the country. By one swimming gala alone the town made £40, and the drawings from the pool for July and August were over £200. There is, in addition, the money spent by the greater number of summer visitors attracted to the burgh.

Embodied by the success of its first attempt to develop its attractions for visitors, the Town Council has now on hand a more ambitious scheme which promises well—a public park. After much agitation for and against, it was decided to buy ground for this project.

After this decision was reached an anonymous donor wrote and offered to buy the ground and give it to the town, on the strict understanding that the gift should remain anonymous. The cost of the ground was accepted. A sum of £4000 is to be spent on the park, and the attractions include six tennis courts, a miniature golf course and a shelter and band stand. The Government share of the work of relief is handsome and the town seems once more likely to gain.

DENMARK HAS NEW FACTORY FOR FORD CARS

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, Dec. 4 (Special Correspondence).—The new Ford factory in Copenhagen is attracting much and flattering attention and is pronounced the most up-to-date factory in Scandinavia, if not in Europe. The location is excellent, with water on two sides, quays at which vessels of up to 5000 tons can come alongside; of the quay accommodation 110 linear meters belong to the factory, with an additional 75 meter quay available. Rails connect the works with the Danish state railways and they have their own transport steamer, the former German cruiser Agier.

The big hall is fitted with all possible modern contrivances, with a main transport way 84 meters long, with a capacity of 200 cars in 8 hours. The main building is a two-storied ferro-concrete structure, 2 crane halls and the brick-built power station, which generates a 200-volt continuous current. The store of reserve parts is stated to represent a value of some 4,000,000 kroner and the works give employment to some 600 workmen and 100 officials, and there are in Denmark about 85 authorized agents and 300 authorized repair shops.

TIMBER DROP HURTS FINNISH EXPORTERS

HELSINKI, Finland, Dec. 1 (Special Correspondence).—The sudden fall of prices on the timber market was almost a calamity for Finnish exporters. The heavy drop, however, acted as a stimulus to sales, and several big contracts, running up to 8000 standards each, have recently been concluded. A number of small sawmills have realized their stocks, but at prices which do not cover cost of production.

By the end of October, the total sales were estimated at approximately 725,000 standards, equivalent to nearly 75 per cent of the total yearly production. Several sawmills have agreed to restrict operations, and the general feeling is that the falling will have to be limited by 25 to 30 per cent next year.

DETROIT, Dec. 19—Bank in Detroit this year will approach $7,250,000,000, a new high which will advance Detroit to place among 10 leading cities in ninth place, its average for the last 19 years. For 11 months were $6,719,000,000.

Since 1914 Detroit has out-temporary swing, before the election is reached, in the opinion of William Boyce Thompson, who is in Chicago on his way to New York. "The west is prosperous, and that, with money plentiful, the country has a period of boom," said Colonel Thompson, who has been in Los Angeles in connection with the bank clearings, the number of checks cleared in the city being 413 per cent, while in New York the number of checks cleared was 514 per cent. "The better showing would have been by Detroit were it not for the fact that the city has developed branch banking so that the operation here, which tends to increase the number of checks cleared, is not so important as it was in the past."

Not so many years ago, it was a commonplace to talk about the "white man's burden," by which was meant the responsibility which rested upon the civilized peoples for educating the more backward races of Asia and Africa in modern civilization and for protecting them from its most deleterious features.

The White Man's Burden

The white man's burden was exemplified by the work of the United States in the Philippines, of France in Morocco, of England in Egypt, and so on. Yet we hear very little of it since the war. The talk is rather the other way. It is critical of the "exploitation" of the backward races by the civilized. It is worth while to examine why this should be so, for the change symbolizes the vast transformation which is going on everywhere in the relations between East and West.

There are two main reasons. The first is that the primary work of education is accomplished, certainly in Asia, though not yet in Africa. The East has learned the rudiments of Western civilization. It no longer believes that the white man is endowed with some superior and almost magical powers which entitle him as a superior being to rule the earth. It holds that the supremacy of the white man was due to knowledge and understanding which it is possible for other races and colors to acquire, by diligent application and work. That knowledge and understanding the East is earnestly and rapidly acquiring. The first in the field was Japan, but China, India, Persia, Egypt, Turkey, are all now in hot pursuit.

It is true that the East has not yet penetrated to the real secret of Western ascendancy. It is still too prone to ascribe it to material equipments, as Japan especially has done, and too little to the moral and spiritual qualities which go to make up the character of people like Abraham Lincoln or Florence Nightingale, whom the West specially admires and takes as its models. None the less the magic of the West has gone, and the East, imperfectly perhaps as yet, but none the less surely, is learning the secret of its power, and is therefore no longer willing to bow down in respect and awe before it. The famous lines of Matthew Arnold,

The East how'd low before the blast,
In patient, deep disdain,
She let the legions thunder past,
And plunged in thought again

are now no longer true.

The second reason is that the West has lost much of its old confidence in itself, while its reputation for excellence has greatly fallen in the East. The Great War, which originated in a European quarrel and gradually drew all the leading civilized nations on to the battle field, was a tremendous proof that something was wrong with the vaunted civilization of the West. The world-wide discontent with the results of modern capitalism, the contrast of multimillionaires and slums, and the mad pursuit of money and pleasure as ends in themselves, are yet further proof that the claim of the West to authority and prestige on the score of undisputed success can no longer be sustained.

The truth is that the difference between the levels of civilization in East and West has enormously diminished of late, and that the chief burden which rests upon the West today is the duty of setting its own house in order. That is not to say that the great civilized nations have not still great obligations to discharge to backward peoples, especially in Africa. In some ways their duties are greater than ever, for with every advance of civilization evil seems to become more complicated in proportion as the good advances. It is far more difficult, for instance, for backward peoples to protect themselves against warlike aggression or economic exploitation by organized capital than it used to be, unless they have the advice and support of a civilized power.

But that protective work itself can only be done if the Western powers have overcome the evils which reign in their own midst. They can show the East how to maintain law and order, how to organize an efficient government, how to produce cheap commodities in abundance, because they have accomplished these things at home. But how are they going to teach it to avoid war, or slums, or the arrogance and tyranny of wealth, when they are the victims of these evils themselves? If the West is to be able to befriend the East, its first duty is to take the beam out of its own eye.

Five years have passed since the Monitor last printed an editorial on automobile headlights.

Automobile Headlights

At that time it was stated that recent occurrences showed the urgent need of solving the headlight problem. Today that problem is apparently no nearer solution than it was then, being merely aggravated by a kind of geometric multiplication of the thousands of automobiles and their batteries of piercing lights. Many people are wondering what, if anything, is likely to be done to remedy this growing nuisance and source of danger.

The danger involved in the blinding glare of powerful headlights is well known to every driver. Night driving is made unnecessarily hazardous, and its pleasure is greatly lessened because of the tension required to avoid collision and at the same time keep to the road. This tension is felt more or less by all the occupants of every car. The pedestrian is equally concerned from the standpoint of his safety—though it must be admitted that the strong headlight is not an unmixed evil, for it does furnish a startling warning to the unwary. But to the most alert pedestrians, bent on crossing a crowded street, the intense light often is blinding and confusing; and this is unnecessary, since ample warning of an approaching car would still be furnished if the light were confined below the waist level.

State laws prescribing automobile light requirements differ materially, a fact which is perhaps unimportant, since no consistent effort is made to enforce existing anti-glare provisions. But this universal non-enforcement is convincing indication that laws will be of little avail until manufacturers shall produce a suitable type of lamp, that can be applied to all kinds of cars. The present headlight is abundantly powerful for illuminating the road, and for warning those afoot; it only remains for the flood of light to be controlled and confined to its real purpose. When a lamp or appliance meeting this requirement shall be provided, laws will hardly be needed to compel its universal adoption, for car owners will welcome it as a boon. Driving by night will then become as safe and pleasurable as by day, and people will wonder how they ever endured the old-style glaring headlight.

Transporting Goods in Canada

The prairie provinces are at present particularly emphatic in arguing for lower freight rates on the Canadian transcontinental railways. They insist upon maintaining the agreement which the Dominion made with the railways in 1897. At that time, Parliament voted money from the public treasury to assist in the cost of constructing a line through the Canadian Rockies to British Columbia. The line went through the Crow's Nest Pass. In the act to grant aid to the pioneer railway builders, Parliament stipulated that a certain limit to the rates on freight transportation should be agreed upon. The compact became known as the Crow's Nest Pass agreement.

Since 1897, operating costs have increased. At that time, it is stated, it cost 54 cents for the railways to earn a dollar. The operating ratio is now said to be 80 cents. In response to an appeal from both the publicly-owned Canadian National and privately-owned Canadian Pacific, the Dominion board of railway commissioners granted the railways permission to raise freight rates above the limit stipulated in the Crow's Nest Pass agreement. The prairie provinces are protesting against this action on the part of the railway commission. Whether the railway commission has the right to set aside an agreement which is embodied in an act of Parliament will probably have to be settled by the Supreme Court of Canada.

The cost of hauling goods from the western provinces to Atlantic ports is a heavy charge on the farming industry. Premier Greenfield of Alberta gave an illustration of it in a recent speech. In 1921 the crop that was marketed, he said, including live stock and grain, was worth $82,795,000. That very same crop, if it had been in Quebec adjoining the Atlantic ports, would have been worth $171,506,000, said Premier Greenfield; the difference of over 100 per cent consisted of hauling costs, handling and freight rates.

While less concerned over the maintenance of the Crow's Nest Pass agreement, British Columbia is just as keenly interested in an adjustment of freight rates to meet the needs of the Pacific coast provinces. Some curious inconsistencies have developed in the Canadian freight rate structure. It is as cheap to ship goods from Liverpool across Canada to Vancouver as it is to ship from towns in eastern Canada on the same railways to Vancouver. The railways have to meet the competition of water transportation from the British Isles through the Panama Canal to the Pacific coast. Cargoes have actually been shipped on the water route from Toronto, down the St. Lawrence River, out to the Atlantic and through the Panama Canal, in competition with the railways across Canada.

There are numerous instances of inequality in the freight rate structure that the return of the Crow's Nest Pass schedule would not rectify. It would rather tend to accentuate inequalities in parts of the country that were not included under this agreement. While the courts are deliberating on the constitutional question of the railway commission's authority to set aside the agreement, public opinion in Canada is coming to the point of view that a general revision of railway freight rates is necessary. The railways might well take the initiative in appealing to the proper authorities to undertake this revision.

Preachments upon the importance of saving, in order that capital may be found for industry and commerce, emphasize the service rendered by the thrifty, who furnish the basis for credits that enable the borrower to feed, clothe and house his employees, while awaiting payment for his products. In the current discussions of the relations of Labor and Capital it is constantly assumed that the owner of capital is conferring a favor upon those to whom he lends it, and there is a tendency on the part of those who criticize what they term the uneconomic demands of Labor for higher wages, with, possibly, the result of lower returns to Capital, to claim that the workers are dependent upon the capital owners. In one sense this is, of course, entirely true. Without the patient savings of years gone by, and of each present year, there would not exist the great accumulations of capital represented by railway systems, mills and factories, and the instrumentalities of commerce. To that extent the managers of trade and industry are assuredly indebted to those who saved a part of their earnings, and loaned them to the promoter of productive enterprises.

This is one view of the material facts relating to the dependence of Labor upon Capital. The other side is that the borrower is just as important to the lender, since without someone to take their money and invest it wisely, the owners of capital would find themselves with a lot of metal or paper certificates of value from which they would derive no income. Capital is necessary; it is in fact the very fundamental of civilized society, but equally necessary is the borrower, who takes idle, inert capital and utilizes it industrially so as to make a profit for himself, and earn interest for his owner.

The special abilities that enable their possessor successfully to prosecute any of the multifarious branches of industry and trade, and the skilled labor of the workers employed, are the factors that determine whether capital shall be profitably employed, or wasted without return. Defenders of the mis-called "capitalist system" merely weaken their case by overstatement, when in telling of what the money lender does for wealth production, they neglect to refer to the equally important service of the entrepreneurs: the men who borrow and use wisely the funds that others have saved.

In those neighborhoods, in whatever section of the United States one visits or resides, away from the larger cities and remote, even at this day, from what are regarded as the centers of purposeful activity, the county court house is the lodestone which attracts to itself, sooner or later, all who come within the orbit of its influence. It is to the country village, designated as the county seat, what the capital buildings are to the states, and in a measure what the White House is to the Nation. It is there that those possessing and exercising the powers delegated to them by a sovereign people abide in their official majesty.

There is a commendable trait, peculiar, one imagines, to the American people. It is that, once having by conscious act reposed faith and confidence in those chosen to offices, high or low, they refuse to look with suspicion or distrust upon official acts performed. Thus the farmer, suddenly elevated to the office of sheriff, immediately becomes invested with an invulnerable cloak of dignity and authority. His word, within the province which he occupies, is law. The Revised Statutes may be Greek to him, as may also the writs and processes he is called upon to serve, but all this is forgotten. The county judge, a dignitary often lacking in a knowledge of the rudiments of the law, attains likewise his own peculiar eminence upon being inducted into office.

But all these tinsel trappings lose their luster when, in due course, the presiding circuit or district judge mounts his bench to order the opening of the semiannual term of court. There, to the thought of the young man who has recently come from the farm to begin his study of the law under the direction of a kindly preceptor, are dignity and grace personified. Far be it from him to question or dispute, as lawyers seem to have a way of doing, the studied and eloquent pronouncements from the bench. He sees among those gathered for the court term the familiar faces of farmer friends or neighbors. Even they, conscious of a new dignity, seem to have assumed a measure of official authority. It is inclined to believe the responsibilities of a juror must be great.

A fledgling lawyer is trying his first jury case. Opposed to him, on the other side of the counsel table, is a veteran of many hard-fought court battles. The observing student involuntarily espouses the cause of the younger advocate, resenting the cocksureness of his confident adversary. He hopes it is true that right always prevails, whatever betides, but is unable to suppress a doubt as to the ability of his untried friend to give to the right just the chance needed. The court term is short and soon ended. With the departure of the presiding judge and the visiting lawyers the town, with the lengthening of the winter evenings, lapses quickly back into its accustomed quiet. But the court house clings tenaciously to its prestige and its accorded glory. The long steps leading to the door from the brown, leaf-covered lawn, are strewn with leaves and papers swept up and buffeted about by the wind. Tomorrow, perhaps, a trusty from the flimsy jail underneath will sweep and garnish the portal fittingly. Just now a half dozen of these prisoners, under the none too strict supervision of a deputy sheriff, are carrying stove wood from a low shed in the side yard to the jail and to the offices above. Meanwhile the county clerk, the county treasurer, and the register of deeds are settling, by friendly yet heated argument, the destiny of their own nation and that of other countries more or less remote. The clerk of the court and the county judge, unmindful of approaching darkness, have resumed their effort to determine the checker championship of the county seat.

Against the cold gray sky, two crows lazily spread their jet wings. A little farther on, past Lincoln, long stretches of blue-brown woods, beautiful in their winter freedom from foliage, lie along the horizon where, doubtless, a little stream flows on its way toward the Platte. These swift winter sketches hint the tale of different occupations, of community habits, of farming grown more hopeful, as it has drawn nearer to watercourses.

Not the black acres of plowland, guarded in some places rather insecurely with high, decrepit fences, but the high west, have encroached upon the low middle country. And now the rapidly passing procession of seared cornfields begins. Here is a pile of dull red corn cobs, useful as fuel; and there, plies, brown, black and variegated, add a touch of color and contentment to the scene. The mid-western country grows constantly more beautiful, as the train glides eastward. The farms spread out in mellowed colorings, ranging from brown and red-brown, through tawny yellow to brighter golden tones.

Work has commenced on the projected subway which is to bring Moscow's transportation facilities into line with those of the largest western European capitals. Digging has begun in two places in the central part of the city. A large number of charts and plans outlining the proposed subway route have been drawn up, and it is hoped that the subway will be in operation by 1926.

This is a popular season for lectures and debates here. Mr. Lunacharsky recently delivered an address on the curious tribal customs of the primitive peoples living in the northern part of European Russia and Siberia. He painted this country as a storehouse of undeveloped or very badly developed natural wealth in the shape of lumber, furs, fish, gold and other mineral resources, and declared that the Soviet Government must work more actively for the realization of a program of economic and cultural improvement in this vast neglected area. Dr. Semashko, Commissar for Health, recently presided at a discussion of the philosophical theme, "Idealism Versus Materialism," and Mr. Joffe, a member of the Russian delegation in England, delivered an address on "Contemporary England."

The hardships which Russian university students are compelled to undergo in order to obtain an education are constantly discussed in the press here. Very few students nowadays can rely on support from their families, especially since the Government does everything in its power to bring a larger and larger proportion of students of working-class origin into the higher institutions of learning. Mr. Hodorovsky, one of the most active workers in the Commissariat for Education, recently pointed out that, while the life of the students is still hard, the Government has taken several steps toward alleviating their condition. One of these is the increase of the sum of money appropriated for the benefit of the students from 9,000,000 rubles last year to 13,000,000 rubles this year. Most of this money goes directly to the students in the form of monthly pensions. Students in the large centers receive twenty rubles a month, while in the provinces the pension is fifteen rubles a month. Thirty thousand students receive these pensions. Mr. Hodorovsky also mentioned certain plans for improving the condition of the students by providing them with cooperative living quarters and dining-rooms and cheap books.

The Soviet Government is almost as active in de-Russifying the non-Muscovite parts of the Soviet Union as the Tsarist Government was in Russifying them. Before the Revolution only the Russian language was permitted in schools and courts all over the Empire. Now all the separate republics have a full right to the use of their own languages. This process of conciliating local sentiment on the language issue has gone especially far in the Ukraine, where the nationalist feeling is especially strong. A report comes from Kiev to the effect that about 100 employees in Government and economic offices in Kiev have been dismissed because they refused to learn the Ukrainian language and otherwise obstructed the policy of Ukrainization in the public services. Before the Revolution it was the local patriots who suffered from the application of the Government policy in the language question; now it is the Russian Nationalists who are unwilling to learn the local languages of the regions where they live.

It seems likely that those private traders who survived the intensive campaign to push co-operative stores at the expense of private trade which was inaugurated last spring may expect easier going, at least in the near future. The rapid growth of the co-operatives during the last few months has had a rather disillusioning accompaniment in the shape of constantly increased demands for credit. In view of the pressing need of the industries for all the capital and credit which can be spared, a sentiment has grown up in economic administrative circles to the effect that the co-operatives must be thrown more on their own resources and limited in their credit demands. This idea was clearly outlined in Premier Rykov's speech before the Trade Union Congress. Once the policy of artificially stimulating the growth of co-operatives by giving them large amounts of credit is abandoned or suspended, private traders may anticipate something of a business revival for themselves.

Editorial Notes

Somewhat reminiscent of Alice's adventures are the reports of the first national Futurist Congress recently held in Milan, Italy. The subjects discussed included, for instance, such fantastic themes as the aerial theater, the spiritual alphabet and the ideal Futurist village. This latter, by the way, a certain delegate is reported as having said, is one in which the trees give out artificial perfumes and have among their branches extraordinary birds! Then stress was laid on the claim that the past had enjoyed a "perpendicular conception of music," whereas the future would have a "horizontal conception of it." At the very outset of the meeting it was voted that there should be no resolutions passed, on the ground that they constitute an offense to liberty of thought. From such a standpoint many another organization, upholding entirely different ideals, might to advantage take to itself a tinge of Futurism.

While fully recognizing the validity of the plea offered by the opponents of the bill, recently passed by the House of Representatives of the United States, which would make nonmailable all weapons that can be concealed, it is well always to gain a clear concept of anything before violently opposing or favoring it. This plea is, of course, the time-worn one that under the Constitution individuals are specifically permitted to bear arms. So they still might under proper precautions. But what those in favor of the bill hope to do is to prevent people from carrying weapons who have no reason other than an offensive one for doing so. A law such as that proposed might not stop all such practices at once, but it would constitute quite a step in that direction. Even as children we learned that little drops of water, little grains of sand, make the mighty ocean and the pleasant land.

Across America in December

Possibly no one would select mid-December as the ideal time for a pleasure trip across America. But if from necessity one undertakes such a journey, he may have experiences quite as pleasant in their way as are those of the summer excursion. Indeed, for observant eyes there are wonderful discoveries of the fundamental structure, if it may be so termed, upon which summer beauty must wax and bloom. And there is in the early winter landscape an individual charm which is not at all in need of the softening effect of either summer verdure or late winter snows.

In order to appreciate the peculiar beauty of what, to many, might seem merely a vast sweep of more or less desolate land, one should perhaps possess, or cultivate, a clear sense of the loveliness of subdued colorings. One who studies and enjoys the effects of cloud shadows, must first truly esteem sunlight. Such a one knows that the atmosphere of a clear frosty morning may be revealed by depicting the shadow of a stark winter tree falling across a white roadway. So, your winter traveler may see from the train window color as definite and rich as that of summer time, only different, and beautified, possibly, by a quality, not unlike humility, which attends nature's long waiting period.

Should one, accustomed to the exhilarating airs and scenes of a mountain state, leave his homeland at nightfall, traveling eastward in mid-December, he may, upon awakening the following morning in Nebraska, at first feel stricken to the heart with the dreary aspect before him. The mountains, symbols to him of all true aspiration, have disappeared. Gray clouds and huddling white smoke envelop the train and a flat little world.

For the moment, his only pleasure is a sort of detached sympathy with the groups of women and children that stand patiently in doorways of diminutive homes watching the train. But as the journey progresses, the towns assume a better appearance; a bit of lace at a window, green shutters, and small, white-steeped churches are fleeting shadows, cast for a moment across the traveler's way, which tell of the contented or the wistful lives they represent.

A few scattering pine trees, looking like runaway outposts from the high west, have encroached upon the low middle country. And now the rapidly passing procession of seared cornfields begins. Here is a pile of dull red corn cobs, useful as fuel; and there, plies, brown, black and variegated, add a touch of color and contentment to the scene. The mid-western country grows constantly more beautiful, as the train glides eastward. The farms spread out in mellowed colorings, ranging from brown and red-brown, through tawny yellow to brighter golden tones.

Against the cold gray sky, two crows lazily spread their jet wings. A little farther on, past Lincoln, long stretches of blue-brown woods, beautiful in their winter freedom from foliage, lie along the horizon where, doubtless, a little stream flows on its way toward the Platte. These swift winter sketches hint the tale of different occupations, of community habits, of farming grown more hopeful, as it has drawn nearer to watercourses.

Not the black acres of plowland, guarded in some places rather insecurely with high, decrepit fences,

indicate a closer approach to the great mid-western corn lands. Symmetrical haystacks, standing in golden fields edged with red-brown weeds, sweep past; and pale straw stacks in gray-green fields appear. Color, indeed, is everywhere, subdued and beautiful, and enhanced occasionally by the deeper note of fire-blackened patches, or by a few spruces on a hillside, standing dark and bold against the white sky. Even the Missouri River, broad, flat, and apparently motionless, with its low mud islands, yields a touch of color; for across the drab water, the wooded bluffs are lovely in their hazy wintry blue.

The one watching for cross-country winter colors is likely to find that Chicago, at seven o'clock on a gray December morning, compels him to appeal somewhat to faith and imagination. Yet, the miles upon miles of lowly dwellings and dingy buildings that stretch along the railways entering that vehement city are full of wonderful shadows, gray and steel and slate, and true to type, hinting all manner of stirring possibilities, for cities, as well as country places, have their characteristic colorings. Occupations paint their own canvases; and winter is as good a time as summer, if not a better one, to detect the underlying "first wash."

From this point eastward, marked changes appear in the character of the country. Softly rounded little hills, oak trees with a few scarred leaves still clinging to wintry branches, the more generally wooded appearance, and trees standing in marshy places, hint, possibly, that this is where the east begins. Here are dun-colored patches, where Colorado might display alkali. Rolling farm country, black soil in plowed fields, black, paddy roads, and tree stumps standing in cleared fields, all these are new and interesting items to the traveler accustomed to the wide, yellow-colored, irrigated west.

Onward and eastward, the sweeps of land become ever more undulating. There are more wooded hills, now rich in their purplish-brown disarray, and more and larger bodies of water. Dusk at Cleveland, with a few red lights blinking on points that jut out on Lake Erie, closes the tourist's second day.

The low gray clouds that have for two days enveloped the vast country stretching from west to east have lifted; and on the third morning, the sojourner finds the kindly sun shining on New England hills. Here, indeed, the sober winter colors, spread across the somewhat austere contour, are truly characteristic: grave almost to sternness, but hinting with lovely quiet tones, which are to endure through rigors of icy blasts, all the marvelous possibilities of summer unfoldings to come.

Is not this what New England suggests to all who love America, from east to west, and back again? Puritan faith and confidence—somber, possibly, and tested by superlative hardships—when viewed through the perspective of appreciative remembrance, glow with unmistakable richness, the warmth of unquenchable adherence to an ideal. And how truly traceable to this fundamental faithfulness to a great trust is all the wonderful growth and fruition of a great nation! Winter colors, viewed botanically or metaphorically, are indeed quite as notable and as beautiful as are the burgeoning that mark summer time so glorious.

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Moscow

Moscow, Dec. 1
Work has commenced on the projected subway which is to bring Moscow's transportation facilities into line with those of the largest western European capitals. Digging has begun in two places in the central part of the city. A large number of charts and plans outlining the proposed subway route have been drawn up, and it is hoped that the subway will be in operation by 1926.

This is a popular season for lectures and debates here. Mr. Lunacharsky recently delivered an address on the curious tribal customs of the primitive peoples living in the northern part of European Russia and Siberia. He painted this country as a storehouse of undeveloped or very badly developed natural wealth in the shape of lumber, furs, fish, gold and other mineral resources, and declared that the Soviet Government must work more actively for the realization of a program of economic and cultural improvement in this vast neglected area. Dr. Semashko, Commissar for Health, recently presided at a discussion of the philosophical theme, "Idealism Versus Materialism," and Mr. Joffe, a member of the Russian delegation in England, delivered an address on "Contemporary England."

The hardships which Russian university students are compelled to undergo in order to obtain an education are constantly discussed in the press here. Very few students nowadays can rely on support from their families, especially since the Government does everything in its power to bring a larger and larger proportion of students of working-class origin into the higher institutions of learning. Mr. Hodorovsky, one of the most active workers in the Commissariat for Education, recently pointed out that, while the life of the students is still hard, the Government has taken several steps toward alleviating their condition. One of these is the increase of the sum of money appropriated for the benefit of the students from 9,000,000 rubles last year to 13,000,000 rubles this year. Most of this money goes directly to the students in the form of monthly pensions. Students in the large centers receive twenty rubles a month, while in the provinces the pension is fifteen rubles a month. Thirty thousand students receive these pensions. Mr. Hodorovsky also mentioned certain plans for improving the condition of the students by providing them with cooperative living quarters and dining-rooms and cheap books.

The Soviet Government is almost as active in de-Russifying the non-Muscovite parts of the Soviet Union as the Tsarist Government was in Russifying them. Before the Revolution only the Russian language was permitted in schools and courts all over the Empire. Now all the separate republics have a full right to the use of their own languages. This process of conciliating local sentiment on the language issue has gone especially far in the Ukraine, where the nationalist feeling is especially strong. A report comes from Kiev to the effect that about 100 employees in Government and economic offices in Kiev have been dismissed because they refused to learn the Ukrainian language and otherwise obstructed the policy of Ukrainization in the public services. Before the Revolution it was the local patriots who suffered from the application of the Government policy in the language question; now it is the Russian Nationalists who are unwilling to learn the local languages of the regions where they live.

It seems likely that those private traders who survived the intensive campaign to push co-operative stores at the expense of private trade which was inaugurated last spring may expect easier going, at least in the near future. The rapid growth of the co-operatives during the last few months has had a rather disillusioning accompaniment in the shape of constantly increased demands for credit. In view of the pressing need of the industries for all the capital and credit which can be spared, a sentiment has grown up in economic administrative circles to the effect that the co-operatives must be thrown more on their own resources and limited in their credit demands. This idea was clearly outlined in Premier Rykov's speech before the Trade Union Congress. Once the policy of artificially stimulating the growth of co-operatives by giving them large amounts of credit is abandoned or suspended, private traders may anticipate something of a business revival for themselves.

Further, France has always regretted that after the breakdown of the Parmentier conversations at Washington, Mr. Baldwin concluded, against the advice of Mr. Bonar Law, an Anglo-American arrangement under which England is repaying America—an arrangement which is generally supposed, if America share the attitude of England toward France, as well as the attitude of America toward its other debtors. The conditions, which have been freely stated in the newspapers as being suggested by the bankers of New York—conditions which in themselves are generous in that they propose a moratorium at a low rate of interest and a partial cancellation—are not regarded as trustworthy in France, for the simple reason that they hardly square with the 1921 law, which laid down the minimum American demand.

It is not doubted that financial opinion in America—indeed, all enlightened opinion in America—is generous toward France, but there are, as seen here, as yet no signs that the whole country is prepared to enter into an arrangement which from the French point of view would be satisfactory.

When M. Daeschner, the new French Ambassador to Washington, took up his post, he will doubtless carry the question a stage further, and it is possible that we are on the eve of renewed discussions of a serious character.

"Perlinax" wrote the other day this sentence, which well expresses the French view: "In future the problem of interallied debts will become of greater importance for France than the problem of reparations."
